CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE FIFTY-SECOND CONGRESS.

FIRST SESSION.

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 7, 1891.

The first Monday of December being the day prescribed by the Constitution of the United States for the annual meeting of Congress, the first session of the Fifty-second Congress commenced this day.

The Senate assembled in its Chamber at the Capitol.

The VICE-PRESIDENT of the United States (Mr. LEVI P. MORTON, of the State of New York) took the chair at 12 o'clock noon, and said:

It gives the Chair great pleasure to extend a hearty welcome to the members of this body, who this day resume their official duties after a season of rest from their arduous labor. This being the day designated by the Constitution of the United States for the annual meeting of Congress, the Senate pursuant thereto is now in session and will come to order.

PRAYER.

Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D., Chaplain to the Senate, offered the following prayer:

God of our fathers and our God, we seek Thy benediction as we come, amid abounding mercy, to the responsibilities of this hour. Accept our thanks for Thy kind leading, for the blessing that has abode upon us in our persons, in our families, and in our land.

We thank Thee for abundant harvests, for the rewards of labor, for freedom from pestilence, and for continued peace and prosperity in the nation. Thou hast not thus dealt, O Lord, with any other people. We seek Thy continued favor. Make us worthy of our rich heritage, hallowed by the faith and piety, the tears and blood of our fathers.

Bless Thy servants, the President and Vice-President, with the Cabinet council. Pour upon the two Houses of Congress very richly of Thy spirit. Have in Thy holy keeping these Thy servants, blessing them in their persons, in their families, in their social and public relations, so guiding by Thy divine counsel that they may have peace, and that our land may be blessed.

Bless us in the great family of nations, causing our judges to decree righteous judgments, and making the defenders of the nation to be governed by the spirit of the Prince of Peace.

God of Abraham and of Isaac and of Jacob, the God of the nations of the earth, so highly exalting us, look in mercy upon the oppressed of all lands. Pity Thine own ancient people, persecuted and scattered, and so animate their hearts and the hearts of all in authority everywhere with the truth and justice and righteousness of the Prince of Peace that all nations and peoples may soon enjoy the blessings which we so abundantly possess.

Guide us this day by Thy divine counsel. Grant richly of Thy grace and of Thy peace. Restrain from all evil and quicken us in all good, using us for Thy glory, so that finally, when the end of this earthly conflict shall come, we may be gathered to the enjoyment of Thy people's rest.

Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done upon earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen.

MY DEAR SIR: Having agreed to accept a place on the railroad commission of Texas, and having tendered my resignation to the governor of the State of Texas of the position of a Senator in the Congress of the United States, to take effect on the 10th of June next, it becomes my duty to advise you of the fact of my resignation.

From a sense of duty to the State and people of Texas I with regret terminate my connection with the Senate to accept a position of less dignity and of less emoluments. And I leave the Senate with my sincerest wishes for the welfare and happiness of yourself and each individual Senator; for my relations have been pleasant with all.

Very truly and respectfully,

STATE OF FLORIDA,
Office Secretary of State, ss:

I, Jno. L. Crawford, secretary of state, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a correct transcript of the original now on file in this office.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State of Florida, at Tallahassee, the capital, this 28th day of July, A. D. 1891.

[SEAL.] JNO. L. CRAWFORD,
Secretary of State.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I present the credentials of Hon. Robert H. M. Davidson, who was on the 22d day of September last appointed by the governor of Florida to be a Senator from the State of Florida, to fill an alleged vacancy occasioned by the termination of the term of Wilkinson Call. This appointment is attested by the signature of the governor, the secretary of state, and the great seal of the State.

The credentials just read present the questions as between these claimants to the seat. My own opinion is that the proper course to be pursued is to refer the credentials of both claimants to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, so that the questions may be decided in the light of a thorough investigation of them. But for the present I will ask that both credentials lie upon the table to-day, with the probability that I shall on to-morrow move their reference to the committee, when such committee shall be appointed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection it will be so ordered.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the credentials be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The credentials will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

IN THE NAME OF THE STATE OF FLORIDA.

To all whom these presents may come, greeting:

Whereas the term of office of Wilkinson Call as United States Senator from Florida expired on the 3d day of March, A. D. 1891, during the recess of the Legislature of said State, whereby a vacancy then happened in the office of United States Senator from Florida during such recess as aforesaid; and

Whereas a Senator has not been chosen by the Legislature of the State of Florida to fill such vacancy; and

Whereas the Legislature of the State of Florida is not now in session and a recess thereof exists at this time:

Now, therefore, I, Francis P. Fleming, governor of the State of Florida, by virtue of the authority in me vested by the Constitution of the United States, have appointed, and by these presents do hereby appoint, Robert H. M. Davidson to be United States Senator from the State of Florida until the next meeting of the Legislature of the State of Florida.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the great seal of the State to be affixed, at Tallahassee, the capital, this 22d day of September, A. D. 1891, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and sixteenth year.

FRANCIS P. FLEMING,
Governor of Florida.

In obedience to the opinion and the decision of the supreme court of Florida, and the peremptory writ thereon, to me issued this day in the case of "The State of Florida ex rel. Francis P. Fleming, governor, plaintiff, vs. John L. Crawford, secretary of state, defendant," I have affixed the great seal of the State, at Tallahassee, the capital, this 17th day of November, A. D. 1891, hereunto.

Attest:
[SEAL.] JOHN L. CRAWFORD,
Secretary of State.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I desire simply to remark that I do not now object to the request made by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] in reference to the credentials of Mr. Call and the alleged credentials of Mr. Davidson, with the understanding that that matter shall come up to-morrow.

Whilst I am on my feet I might as well say that after a very careful examination into that case, both as to the law and the facts, I find that there is no controversy as to the facts, and therefore no necessity for an investigation by the Committee on Privileges and Elections as to the facts. And as to the law of the case, the statute is plain on its face. Besides, it has received the judicial determination of this body. So that there now remains neither a question of law nor a question of fact about which the attention of the committee can be invoked by this body.

One word more. The constitutional right of a State to be represented when she has properly selected her representative in this body is as binding on us to recognize for to-day as for to-morrow.

The equality of the States in this body ought not to be impaired for one single hour when there is no serious question about which there can be any difference among Senators who have looked into the matter. However, in deference to my distinguished friend from Tennessee, I will make no objection to the passing of the case until to-morrow, but I give notice that then I shall insist that the Senate have both the facts and the law, without a single controversy as to either, and ought to proceed at once to seat the legally elected Senator from the State of Florida.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the statement of the governor of Florida, showing the ground on which he relies to support his authority to make an appointment after the Legislature of his State had elected a Senator, in form certainly, has been sent to me during the vacation, and I suppose it has been sent to all the members of the Senate. I have carefully examined it, as has the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], and so far as I can discover it presents simply a question of the constitutionality and construction of the existing law of Congress for the election of Senators. It is a question which has been before the Senate heretofore, and has always, so far as I am aware, been decided in the same way; indeed, I am not aware that there is a difference of opinion in the Senate in regard to that question. Certainly what the Senator from Mississippi says as to the constitutional right of every State to be equally represented here has a great deal of weight. If it shall turn out that the gentleman who filled the seat in the Senate for the recent term is entitled to it, justice to him would require that he should have his title declared at as early a day as possible, in order that his proper share of the duties of the Senate upon committee and elsewhere may be assigned to and performed by him.

It occurred to me, therefore, that after the oath had been administered to the new Senators it might be proper to move to take up the Florida case at that time, and then it can go over until to-morrow under the rule, if any single Senator prefers. If, in the course of any discussion which may arise upon it to-morrow, it shall turn out that there is such a grave question in the mind of any single Senator as seems to require the service of a committee in aiding us to settle it, I for one should be in favor of the reference; but if, as I suppose, it shall turn out that there is no such question, I do not see why the Senate should not then go on to deal with it and to dispose of it without reference to a committee.

Mr. GEORGE. I entirely agree with what has been said by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. There is only one observation which I desire to make, so that Senators may reflect upon it.

This certificate of the secretary of the State, which is unimpeached and unimpeachable, showing that an election was held, whether legal or not, at this point does establish the fact that the forms of an election were gone through with. That being on the record, that being before the Senate, then the action of the governor appears before us in this light, that he has usurped the constitutional power which has been vested by the Constitution in this body to judge of the election and qualifications of its own members, and has undertaken for this body to decide that grave question for himself, and having decided that question, then to usurp the further power of appointing a member of this body.

I desire simply to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that, an election having been held, it was not competent for the governor of Florida to usurp the functions vested by the Constitution in this body to decide upon the regularity of that election.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The credentials will lie on the table, in the absence of objection.

SWEARING IN OF SENATORS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Senators whose credentials have been heretofore recorded and placed on the files of the Senate and those whose credentials have been presented to-day will please come forward in groups of four to receive the oath of office.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, before the oath of office is administered to Mr. Brice as a Senator from Ohio, I desire to say that it is contended by large numbers of the citizens of Ohio that he was not an inhabitant of that State when he was elected Senator and therefore not eligible to sit as a Senator from Ohio. I am advised that this contention will be presented to the Senate in due time. As the credentials of Mr. Brice are in due form, he is entitled, according to all the precedents I have been able to find, to admission to the Senate, subject to any contest as to his eligibility hereafter. I simply give this notice that there may be no waiver or misunderstanding in case the Legislature of Ohio or the people of Ohio should establish the fact to the satisfaction of the Senate that he was not an inhabitant of that State when elected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The names of the Senators elect will now be read in alphabetical order.

The Chief Clerk read the names of—

William B. Allison, of the State of Iowa.
Joseph C. S. Blackburn, of the State of Kentucky.
Calvin S. Brice, of the State of Ohio.
James Donald Cameron, of the State of Pennsylvania.

The respective Senators elect whose names had been called came forward, and the oath prescribed by law was administered to them.

The Chief Clerk called the names of—

Horace Chilton, of the State of Texas.
Fred. T. Dubois, of the State of Idaho.
Charles N. Felton, of the State of California.
Jacob H. Gallinger, of the State of New Hampshire.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I desire to say, before the oath of office is administered to Mr. Chilton, the Senator elect from Texas, that his case seems to me to present a very grave constitutional question, whether the governor of Texas was entitled to make the appointment in anticipation of the vacancy occasioned by Mr. Reagan's resignation, or whether, as was carefully and scrupulously done several times in the recent New Hampshire cases, the governor should have waited until the vacancy actually existed. For the reason, however, which has been already stated, that it is desirable that the representation of every State shall be full, I shall interpose no objection to administering the oath to that gentleman, but after the oath has been administered to him I shall move to refer the case to the Committee on Privileges and Elections to report as to the validity of the appointment.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I desire an opportunity to examine the credentials of Mr. Dubois as Senator elect from Idaho, and I ask that they lie upon the table until to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The credentials have already been read and placed on file by previous action of the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. I rose to state that the credentials of Mr. Dubois had been presented at a previous session of the Senate, referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, reported back, and placed on file. Under these circumstances, the credentials seeming to be entirely regular, I hope there will be no delay in allowing the Senator elect from that State to be sworn in.

So far as the request of the honorable Senator from Maine is concerned, that the credentials lie over until to-morrow, I am willing that they shall lie over until the other Senators are sworn in against whom there is no objection, if that course will be agreeable to him, and that we dispose of the case at that time.

Mr. HALE. I have no desire, Mr. President, to unduly delay this case on the swearing in of the new Senator from Idaho, if he is to be sworn in. A single objection, of course, will carry it over until to-morrow. I do not care what form that takes. I will ask at present that the Senator elect from Idaho shall not be sworn in with the others until after all the cases that are not excluded are disposed of.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection to that.

Mr. PLUMB. Let me make a suggestion to the Senator from Maine. This case, it seems to me, is on all fours with the case about which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] has just spoken, that of the Senator elect from Texas [Mr. Chilton], in reference to qualification; that is, the authority by which members sit in this body. If there be anything in the suggestion which the Senator from Massachusetts makes, to the effect that the Senate ought to be full, in the case of those persons who appear here for the purpose of admission, it must be just as strong in the case of Idaho as in the case of Texas. Therefore, it seems to me, following that precedent and the suggestion made by the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, that the Senator from Idaho should be sworn in for the present, leaving the question to be considered afterwards as to the entire regularity of the proceedings of the Legislature by which he was chosen a Senator.

Mr. HALE. I do not seek to go into any controversy, and I do not know that there will be any controversy, about the swearing in of the Senator elect when the proper time comes, but for the present I object, so that the matter may go over until the undisputed cases have been acted upon by the members being sworn in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senators whose names have been called, with the exception of the Senator elect from Idaho [Mr. Dubois], will please come forward and receive the oath of office.

The respective Senators elect whose names had been called (with the exception of Mr. Dubois) came forward, and the oath prescribed by law was administered to them.

The Chief Clerk called the names of—

Charles H. Gibson, of the State of Maryland.
John B. Gordon, of the State of Georgia.
Henry C. Hansbrough, of the State of North Dakota.
J. L. M. Irby, of the State of South Carolina.

As their names were called the respective Senators elect came forward, and the oath prescribed by law was administered to them.

The Chief Clerk called the names of—

James K. Jones, of the State of Arkansas.
John P. Jones, of the State of Nevada.

The Chief Clerk read the names of—

Justin S. Morrill, of the State of Vermont.
John M. Palmer, of the State of Illinois.
William A. Peffer, of the State of Kansas.

As their names were called the respective Senators elect came forward, and the oath prescribed by law was administered to them.

The Chief Clerk read the names of—

James L. Pugh, of the State of Alabama.
Watson C. Squire, of the State of Washington.
Leland Stanford, of the State of California.
Henry M. Teller, of the State of Colorado.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 8, 1891.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SENATOR FROM ARKANSAS.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, my colleague, Mr. Jones of Arkansas, is present, and I ask that the oath of office be now administered to him.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator elect from Arkansas will come forward and receive the oath of office.

Mr. James K. Jones, of Arkansas, was escorted to the Vice-President's desk by Mr. BERRY, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him, he took his seat in the Senate.

He also presented a petition of the Legislature of Montana, praying for the removal of the mineral restrictions upon school lands and the extension of the term of leases; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented a petition of the General Assembly of Colorado, praying for a donation of part of the Fort Lyon reservation for a home for disabled soldiers; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SENATORS FROM IDAHO AND FLORIDA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The presentation of petitions and memorials is in order.

Mr. SHERMAN. It has been the general custom of the Senate, I believe, not to proceed to the presentation of petitions, the introduction of bills, and the like, until after the annual message is received from the President. I hope that that course will be pursued.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that there is a question before the Senate arising on the credentials of Mr. Dubois, claiming a seat from the State of Idaho. I suppose that under the rules of the Senate that is a question of the highest privilege and goes on until disposed of. I suggest, therefore, that that takes precedence of all other business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the understanding of the Chair. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the fact that the case of Florida is first in order.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose that under the rule of the Senate, the case of Mr. Dubois being a case of credentials, he having a certificate from the executive of the State, would take precedence of all other business.

Mr. CULLOM. And the credentials were presented during the last session of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I do not make any point about that. Will the Chair be kind enough to have the rule of the Senate in regard to questions of credentials read for information? I have not referred to it lately.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The rule will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

RULE VI.

PRESENTATION OF CREDENTIALS.

1. The presentation of the credentials of Senators elect and other questions of privilege shall always be in order, except during the reading and correction of the Journal, while a question of order or a motion to adjourn is pending, or while the Senate is dividing; and all questions and motions arising or made upon the presentation of such credentials shall be proceeded with until disposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion will now be read from the Journal.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HALE having objected to the oath of office being this day administered to Mr. Frederick T. Dubois, whose credentials as a Senator from the State of Idaho were heretofore presented,

Mr. CULLOM submitted a motion that the oath prescribed by law be administered to Mr. Dubois, and Ordered, That the consideration of the motion be postponed to to-morrow.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope that that order will be carried out, and that Mr. Dubois will now be sworn in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection. The Senator elect from Idaho will come forward and receive the oath of office.

Mr. Dubois was escorted to the Vice-President's desk by Mr. SHOUP, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him, he took his seat in the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I now ask that the motion in the case of Mr. Call be taken up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion will be read from the Journal by the Chief Clerk.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

On motion by Mr. HOAR that the oath prescribed by law be administered to Mr. Wilkinson Call as a Senator from the State of Florida, Ordered, That the consideration of the motion be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. HOAR. If that motion should be adopted by the Senate I give notice that I shall move that the credentials or other documents relating to the case of Mr. Davidson and Mr. Call be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, with direction to report in regard to the same. It seems to me that there is a very strong case for administering the oath to Mr. Call at once, yet I think also that there should be a provision for hearing parties hereafter if there should be any claim that the Senate has acted unadvisedly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator elect from Florida will come forward and receive the oath of office.

Mr. Call was escorted to the Vice-President's desk by Mr. PASCO, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him, he took his seat in the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the papers in regard to the claim of Mr. Robert H. M. Davidson to a seat in the Senate from the State of Florida now occupied by Mr. WILKINSON CALL be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, with direction to investigate the matter and report to the Senate at an early day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion made by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I move that the papers on file in relation to the contest in the State of Idaho by Mr. W. H. Clagett take the same course as that under the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts with reference to Mr. Davidson—that they be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which committee shall examine the case and report to the Senate at an early day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion made by the Senator from Maine.

The motion was agreed to.

RECESS.

Mr. SHERMAN (at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.). I move that the Senate take a recess until 2 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and at the expiration of the recess (at 2 o'clock p. m.) the Senate resumed its session.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

At 2 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m., Mr. KERR, the Clerk of the House of Representatives, appeared below the bar of the Senate and delivered the following message:

Mr. President, I am directed by the House of Representatives to inform the Senate that a quorum of the House of Representatives has assembled; that CHARLES F. CRISP, a Representative from the State of Georgia, has been elected Speaker; that JAMES KERR, a citizen of the State of Pennsylvania, has been elected Clerk; and that the House is ready to proceed to business.

Also, that the House of Representatives has passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed by the Speaker on the part of the House of Representatives, to join the committee appointed on the part of the Senate, to wait on the President of the United States and notify him that a quorum of the two Houses has assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

In accordance with the above, the Speaker announced the appointment of Mr. BLOUNT, Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky, and Mr. REED as members of said committee.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What is the further pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senate choose, I think a recess might be taken for half an hour. The members of the committee on the part of the House of Representatives to wait upon the President have not yet presented themselves. I take it the Senate will probably prefer to conclude the proceeding to-day and have the message communicated from the President rather than wait until to-morrow or later on. If the Senate will take a recess, perhaps within half an hour the answer of the President may be returned.

Mr. HARRIS. I will state to the Senator from Ohio that I was informed a few moments since that the members of the House of Representatives are now engaged in drawing for seats, and it will probably take half an hour or an hour to complete it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am told that is all completed so far as the three gentlemen whose names have been sent here are concerned, and they will probably be here in a few minutes.

Mr. HARRIS. It may be that they have drawn.

Mr. SHERMAN. However, I have no objection, if the Senate wishes to adjourn, to communicating with the President to-morrow.

Mr. HARRIS. If the committee will wait upon the President this evening it is not probable that at so late an hour as it would be he would likely communicate his message to the two Houses before to-morrow morning.

Mr. SHERMAN. What does the Senator from Tennessee suggest?

Mr. HARRIS. I am strongly inclined to think that the Senate might as well adjourn and let the committee perform its duty to-morrow morning. But of course I am perfectly content to take any course that the Senator from Ohio may choose to suggest under the circumstances.

Mr. SHERMAN. The trouble is, there might be some delay in getting the committee together in the morning, while all are in the building now, and I think the members of the House are expecting to come over at any moment.

RECESS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio submit a motion for a recess?

Mr. SHERMAN (at 2 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.). I move that the Senate take a recess until 3 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and at the expiration of the recess the Senate resumed its session.

Mr. VOORHEES (at 3 o'clock and 19 minutes p. m.). The other House has just adjourned, and I suppose it is not worth while for us to remain here expecting a message from the President this afternoon. I rise for the purpose of moving that the Senate adjourn, unless some Senator on the other side of the Chamber thinks we should remain here for some other purpose. If not, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 9, 1891, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 8, 1891.

The House met at 12 o'clock m., and was called to order by Mr. EDWARD MCPHERSON, Clerk of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-first Congress.

The CLERK. The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday will be read.

The reading of the Journal having been begun,

Mr. SPRINGER said: I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the Journal of yesterday, at least the formal parts.

The CLERK. By consent, the reading of the names of members present yesterday will be omitted. (There was no objection.) The remainder of the Journal will be read.

The reading of the Journal having been resumed and concluded,

The CLERK said: In the absence of objection the Journal as read will be approved.

There was no objection.

ELECTION OF SPEAKER.

The CLERK. There being obviously a quorum present, the Clerk is ready to receive any motion looking to the organization of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to place in nomination for the office of Speaker Hon. CHARLES F. CRISP——

The CLERK. The Clerk desires to suggest that the regular proceeding would be first a motion to proceed to the election of Speaker.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move, Mr. Clerk, that the House proceed to the election of a Speaker.

A MEMBER. And other officers.

The CLERK. The election of a Speaker is first in order.

The motion of Mr. HOLMAN was agreed to.

The CLERK. Nominations for the office of Speaker are now in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I place in nomination for Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-second Congress Hon. CHARLES F. CRISP, a Representative from the State of Georgia. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. I place in nomination for the same office Hon. THOMAS B. REED, a Representative elect from the State of Maine. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SIMPSON. I place in nomination for Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-second Congress Hon. THOMAS E. WATSON, a Representative from the State of Georgia.

There being no further nominations,

The CLERK said: The Clerk requests Mr. OUTHWAITE of Ohio, Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois, Mr. OATES of Alabama, and Mr. SIMPSON of Kansas to act as tellers. The roll will now be called; and each member as his name is reached will announce his choice for the office of Speaker. The tellers will please take their places.

The tellers having taken their places, the roll was called, with the following result:

For CHARLES F. CRISP, of Georgia, 228; for THOMAS B. REED, of Maine, 83; for THOMAS E. WATSON, of Georgia, 8; not voting, 12; as follows:

The Clerk resumed and concluded the recapitulation of the vote.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Mr. Clerk, I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. BUCHANAN, is detained from his seat by reason of sickness. If he were present he would vote for Mr. CRISP for Speaker.

Mr. BLAND. My colleague, Mr. FYAN, is also absent on account of sickness.

Mr. OUTHWAITE (one of the tellers). Mr. Clerk, on behalf of the tellers appointed to canvass the vote cast for Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-second Congress, I have the honor to report that CHARLES F. CRISP, of Georgia, has received, of the total number of votes cast, 228; THOMAS B. REED, of Maine, has received 83 votes, and THOMAS E. WATSON, of Georgia, has received 8 votes.

The CLERK. The tellers report that they agree in their tally, that the Hon. CHARLES F. CRISP, of the State of Georgia, has received 228 votes for Speaker; that THOMAS B. REED, of Maine, has received 83 votes, and THOMAS E. WATSON, of Georgia, has received 8 votes. Hon. CHARLES F. CRISP, of Georgia, having received a majority of all the votes cast, is declared duly elected Speaker of the House of Representatives for the Fifty-second Congress. [Loud and prolonged applause.]

The gentleman from Texas, Mr. MILLS, and the gentleman from Maine, Mr. REED, will please escort the Speaker elect to the chair; and the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HOLMAN, will administer to him the oath of office.

Mr. MILLS and Mr. REED escorted the Speaker elect to the chair, amid applause and cheers on the floor of the House and in the galleries.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen of the House of Representatives, for the great honor you have conferred upon me I return you heartfelt thanks.

I shall endeavor to discharge the duties of the office of Speaker with courtesy, with firmness, and with absolute impartiality. [Applause.] Let us unite in the hope that our labors here may result in the advancement of the prosperity, the honor, and the glory of our beloved country. [Loud applause.]

I am now ready to take the oath of office, and request the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HOLMAN, to administer it.

The oath of office was then administered to the Speaker elect by Mr. HOLMAN of Indiana.

PRAYER.

The SPEAKER. The Chaplain of the last House will now offer prayer.

The Rev. Dr. MILBURN offered the following prayer:

Almighty and Eternal God, in whose hand our breath is, and whose are all our ways. We render Thee devout and hearty thanks that Thou hast brought so many of the Representatives of the people to the halls of this time-honored Capitol, consecrated by the memory of so many patriots, sages, heroes, and statesmen. Breathe into the soul of every man upon this floor a solemn sense of the lofty trust confided to him to maintain the Constitution, the dignity of the Republic, the honor, safety, and welfare of every citizen, the humblest tiller of the soil, the worker in the mine, at the forge, and in the mill, as well as the rich and prosperous.

Endue these Thy servants with largeness of mind, kindliness of temper, catholicity and hospitality of spirit, with courage and devotion to the interests of their constituents and of the whole country.

Grant Thy blessing to Thy servant, the Speaker of the House, who has just taken his oath of office. Uphold him and every member of the House. Keep them in safety, health, and peace, and enable them to so discharge the duties of their trust as that the country may say, "Well done, good and faithful servants," and that the welfare of the nation shall be prospered and carried forward by their labors.

And to Thy name, O Father, shall be all the honor and glory. Through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS.

The SPEAKER then proceeded to administer the oath of office, the Members and Delegates elect presenting themselves in front of the Speaker's chair as their names were called by States and Territories, and taking the oath of office prescribed by law.

CHANGES IN THE ROLL OF MEMBERSHIP.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk hands to the Speaker a list of changes in the roll of members elect, some of whom have died or resigned since their election, and their places having been

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] makes a motion, to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] submits a substitute. The question will be first upon the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois

The substitute was disagreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon the original resolution offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the following resolution——

The SPEAKER. The Chair requests the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] to suspend until the oath of office is administered to the officers elect.

Mr. SPRINGER. The resolution which I wish to offer is in regard to the Chaplain of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Rev. William H. Milburn, of the State of Illinois, be, and is hereby, elected Chaplain of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-second Congress.

The resolution was agreed to.

The oath of office was then administered by the Speaker to the several officers elect of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-second Congress.

NOTIFICATION OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk be instructed to inform the President of the United States that the House of Representatives has elected CHARLES F. CRISP, a Representative from the State of Georgia, Speaker, and James Kerr, a citizen of the State of Pennsylvania, the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-second Congress.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed by the Speaker, on the part of the House of Representatives, to join the committee appointed on the part of the Senate to wait on the President of the United States, and notify him that a quorum of the two Houses has assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

The resolution was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as such committee Mr. BLOUNT, Mr. MILLS, and Mr. REED.

Subsequently the Speaker said:

If the House will indulge the Chair for one moment, the Chair desires to say that he is informed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] that it is impossible for him to act on the committee to notify the President; and the Chair appoints in the place of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

DRAWING OF SEATS.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I offer the following resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House do now proceed to draw seats for Members and Delegates for the present Congress, in pursuance of Rule XXXII of the last House, and that when the names of absent members are called seats be selected for them by colleagues.

COMMITTEE ON RULES, ETC.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will withdraw that for one moment. I desire to offer a resolution which is in order at the present time.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Let it be withdrawn for a moment.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Speaker appoint a Committee on Rules, on Accounts, on Enrolled Bills, and on Mileage, each to consist of the same number of members as is provided for by the rules of the Fiftieth Congress, and that the rules of the Fiftieth Congress be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

HOUR OF DAILY MEETING.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move the adoption of the resolution which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That until otherwise ordered the daily hour of meeting of the House of Representatives shall be at 12 o'clock m.

The resolution was agreed to.

NOTIFICATION OF THE SENATE.

Mr. HATCH. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That a message be sent to the Senate, to inform that body that a quorum of the House of Representatives has assembled; that CHARLES F. CRISP, a Representative from the State of Georgia, has been elected Speaker; that JAMES KERR, a citizen of the State of Pennsylvania, has been elected Clerk; and that the House is ready to proceed to business.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that a quorum of the Senate had assembled, and that the Senate was ready to proceed to business.

The message further announced that a committee consisting of two members had been appointed to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication that he may be pleased to make; and that Mr. SHERMAN and Mr. HARRIS had been appointed on the part of the Senate.

DRAWING OF SEATS.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to amend the resolution I offered so as to read: "Members absent from the city and on account of illness."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution as modified by the gentleman from Ohio.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House do now proceed to draw seats for Members and Delegates for the present Congress, in pursuance of Rule XXXII of the last House, and that when the names of members absent from the city or on account of sickness are called seats be selected for them by colleagues.

Mr. HERMANN. I will ask the gentleman from Ohio to modify his resolution so that those who may have been requested to draw seats for absent members may be permitted to do so. I have a case of that kind.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That will be considered as being within the scope of the resolution.

The question was taken on the resolution, and it was agreed to.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to make a statement to the House. An informal conference between members on both sides of the House has resulted in a suggestion which will be acceptable to members on both sides—that in the drawing of seats this side of the House will take the seats on this side of the aisle and the first block of seats on the right-hand side of the aisle, or opposite, that the Republicans will take the two next blocks of seats, and the remaining seats will be selected as gentlemen may choose on drawing.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the rule under which the drawing will proceed.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE XXXII.

1. At the commencement of each Congress, immediately after the Members and Delegates are sworn in, the Clerk shall place in a box prepared for that purpose a number of small balls of marble or other material equal to the number of Members and Delegates, which balls shall be consecutively numbered and thoroughly intermingled, and at such hour as shall be fixed by the House for that purpose, by the hands of a page, draw said balls one by one from the box and announce the number as it is drawn, upon which announcement the Member or Delegate whose name on a numbered alphabetical list shall correspond with the number on the ball shall advance and choose his seat for the term for which he is elected.

2. Before said drawing shall commence each seat shall be vacated and so remain until selected under this rule, and any seat having been selected shall be deemed forfeited if left unoccupied before the call of the roll is finished, and whenever the seats of Members and Delegates shall have been drawn no proposition for a second drawing shall be in order during that Congress.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Before proceeding further I ask unanimous consent that ex-Speakers of the House be permitted to select any seats they please.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that ex-Speakers who are members of this House be permitted to select their seats before the drawing.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move a resolution to that effect, which I will send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. BOUTELLE. We will take care of the matter on this side of the House.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I make that suggestion, because it is the custom, without any breach so far as I know.

Mr. BLAND. I hope the objection will be withdrawn.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then I move that ex-Speakers who are members of this House be permitted to select their seats before the drawing takes place.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I would suggest an addition, which has always been agreed to—that the oldest member, who by courtesy is termed "the father of the House," have the same privilege.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. On each side.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the House that there is a resolution on the Clerk's desk which was prepared by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], which proposes to cover both cases, and if there be no objection it will be read by the Clerk.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That all ex-Speakers of the House of Representatives, duly elected members of the Fifty-second Congress, and that all Representatives in said Congress who have been elected to fourteen Congresses, shall be called first in the order of their service and allowed to select their respective seats before the regular drawing for seats commences.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests that that covers the ex-Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] on the one side, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] on the other. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state to members of the House that there has heretofore been some complaint in respect to this drawing which the Chair thinks can be obviated in this way, that when a member's name is called and until he comes forward and takes his seat no other name be called. [Cries of "That is right!"] Sometimes the rapidity with which the names are called militates really against the object and purpose of the rule, which is that when a gentleman's name is called he can select any unoccupied seat. The Chair will therefore direct the Clerk to call the roll in such a manner that until a gentleman called is seated no other name on the roll shall be called. The Clerk will now call the names of the gentlemen excepted by the resolution.

The names of Mr. REED, Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania, and Mr. HOLMAN were then called, and they selected their seats.

The drawing was then proceeded with, commencing at 1:50 p. m. and concluding at 3:15 p. m., the name of Mr. WHEELER of Michigan being first called and that of Mr. PARRETT being last called.

The SPEAKER. The order of the House under the resolution has been executed.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to inform the Chair that I think my name has not been called.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk reports that the gentleman's name was called, and was checked as "called" on the list.

Mr. DINGLEY. I can only say, Mr. Speaker, that I was attending closely to the call and did not hear my name, nor did other gentlemen near me.

The Clerk called Mr. DINGLEY'S name.

The House then, on motion of Mr. SPRINGER (at 3 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.), adjourned.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, December 9, 1891.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. SHERMAN and Mr. HARRIS, the committee appointed, in conjunction with a similar committee of the House of Representatives, to wait upon the President of the United States, appeared below the bar, and

Mr. SHERMAN said: Mr. President, the committee on behalf of the two Houses appointed to wait upon the President of the United States, and to inform him that a quorum of the two Houses is present, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make, have performed their duty, and are advised that the President will communicate to the two Houses immediately in writing.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

At 12 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m., Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of the secretaries of the President of the United States, appeared below the bar and said:

Mr. President, I am directed by the President of the United States to deliver to the Senate a message in writing.

The message was received from the secretary and handed to the Vice-President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the annual message of the President of the United States, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary of the Senate (Mr. ANSON G. MCCOOK) read the message, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The reports of the heads of the several Executive Departments, required by law to be submitted to me, which are herewith transmitted, and the reports of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney-General, made directly to Congress, furnish a comprehensive view of the administrative work of the last fiscal year relating to internal affairs. It would be of great advantage if these reports could have an attentive perusal by every member of Congress and by all who take an interest in public affairs. Such a perusal could not fail to excite a higher appreciation of the vast labor and conscientious effort which are given to the conduct of our civil administration.

The reports will, I believe, show that every question has been approached, considered, and decided from the standpoint of public duty and upon considerations affecting the public interests alone. Again I invite to every branch of the service the attention and scrutiny of Congress.

The work of the State Department during the last year has been characterized by an unusual number of important negotiations and by diplomatic results of a notable and highly beneficial character. Among these are the reciprocal trade arrangements which have been concluded, in the exercise of the powers conferred by section 3 of the tariff law, with the Republic of Brazil, with Spain for its West India possessions, and with San Domingo. Like negotiations with other countries have been much advanced, and it is hoped that before the close of the year further definitive trade arrangements of great value will be concluded.

In view of the reports which had been received as to the diminution of the seal herds in the Bering Sea I deemed it wise to propose to Her Majesty's Government in February last that an agreement for a closed season should be made, pending the negotiations for arbitration which then seemed to be approaching a favorable conclusion. After much correspondence, and delays for which this Government was not responsible, an agreement was reached and signed on the 15th of June, by which Great Britain undertook, from that date and until May 1, 1892, to prohibit the killing by her subjects of seals in the Bering Sea, and the Government of the United States, during the same period, to enforce its existing prohibition against pelagic sealing and to limit the catch by the Fur Seal Company upon the islands to 7,500 skins. If this agreement could have been reached earlier, in response to the strenuous endeavors of this Government, it would have been more effective; but, coming even as late as it did, it unquestionably resulted in greatly diminishing the destruction of the seals by the Canadian sealers.

In my last annual message I stated that the basis of arbitration proposed by Her Majesty's Government for the adjustment of the long-pending controversy as to the seal fisheries was not acceptable. I am glad now to be able to announce that terms satisfactory to this Government have been agreed upon and that an agreement as to the arbitrators is all that is necessary to the completion of the convention. In view of the advanced position which this Government has taken upon the subject of international arbitration, this renewed expression of our adherence to this method for the settlement of disputes such as have arisen in the Bering Sea will, I doubt not, meet with the concurrence of Congress.

Provision should be made for a joint demarcation of the frontier line between Canada and the United States, wherever required by the increasing border settlements, and especially for the exact location of the water boundary in the straits and rivers.

I should have been glad to announce some favorable disposition of the boundary dispute between Great Britain and Venezuela, touching the western frontier of British Guiana, but the friendly efforts of the United States in that direction have thus far been unavailing. This Government will continue to express its concern at any appearance of foreign encroachment on territories long under the administrative control of American states. The determination of a disputed boundary is easily attainable by amicable arbitration, where the rights of the respective parties rest, as here, on historic facts, readily ascertainable.

The law of the last Congress providing a system of inspection for our meats intended for export and clothing the President with power to exclude foreign products from our market in case the country sending them should perpetuate unjust discriminations against any product of the United States placed this Government in a position to effectively urge the removal of such discriminations against our meats. It is gratifying to be able to state that Germany, Denmark, Italy, Austria, and France, in the order named, have opened their ports to inspected American pork products. The removal of these restrictions in every instance was asked for and given solely upon the ground that we have now provided a meat inspection that should be accepted as adequate to the complete removal of the dangers, real or fancied, which had been previously urged. The State Department, our ministers abroad, and the Secretary of Agriculture have coöperated with unflagging and intelligent zeal for the accomplishment of this great result. The outlines of an agreement have been reached with Germany, looking to equitable trade concessions in consideration of the continued free importation of her sugars, but the time has not yet arrived when this correspondence can be submitted to Congress.

The recent political disturbances in the Republic of Brazil have excited regret and solicitude. The information we possessed was too meager to enable us to form a satisfactory judgment of the causes leading to the temporary assumption of supreme power by President Fonseca; but this Government did not fail to express to him its anxious solicitude for the peace of Brazil and for the maintenance of the free political institutions which had recently been established there, nor to offer our advice that great moderation should be observed in the clash of parties and the contest for leadership. These counsels were received in the most friendly spirit, and the latest information is that constitutional government has been reëstablished without bloodshed.

The lynching at New Orleans in March last of eleven men of Italian nativity by a mob of citizens was a most deplorable and discreditable incident. It did not, however, have its origin in any general animosity to the Italian people, nor in any disrespect to the Government of Italy, with which our relations were of the most friendly character. The fury of the mob was directed against these men as the supposed participants or accessories in the murder of a city officer. I do not allude to this as mitigating in any degree this offense against law and humanity, but only as affecting the international questions which grew out of it. It was at once represented by the Italian minister that several of those whose lives had been taken by the mob were Italian subjects, and a demand was made for the punishment of the participants and for an indemnity to the families of those who were killed. It is to be regretted that the manner in which these claims were presented was not such as to promote a calm discussion of the questions involved; but this may well be attributed to the excitement and indignation which the crime naturally evoked. The views of this Government as to its obligations to foreigners domiciled here were fully stated in the correspondence, as well as its purpose to make an investigation of the affair with a view to determine whether there were present any circumstances that could, under such rules of duty as we had indicated, create an obligation upon the United States. The temporary absence of a minister plenipotentiary of Italy at this capital has retarded the further correspondence, but it is not doubted that a friendly conclusion is attainable.

Some suggestions growing out of this unhappy incident are worthy the attention of Congress. It would, I believe, be entirely competent for Congress to make offenses against the treaty rights of foreigners domiciled in the United States cognizable in the Federal courts. This has not, however, been done, and the Federal officers and courts have no power in such cases to intervene either for the protection of a foreign citizen or for the punishment of his slayers. It seems to me to follow, in this state of the law, that the officers of the State charged with police and judicial powers in such cases must, in the consideration of international questions growing out of such incidents, be regarded in such sense as Federal agents as to make this Government answerable for their acts in cases where it would be answerable if the United States had used its constitutional power to define and punish crimes against treaty rights.

The civil war in Chile, which began in January last, was continued, but fortunately with infrequent and not important armed collisions, until August 28, when the Congressional forces landed near Valparaiso and, after a bloody engagement, captured that city. President Balmaceda at once recognized that his cause was lost, and a provisional government was speedily established by the victorious party. Our minister was promptly directed to recognize and put himself in communication with this Government so soon as it should have established its de facto character, which was done. During the pendency of this civil contest frequent indirect appeals were made to this Government to extend belligerent rights to the insurgents and to give audience to their representatives. This was declined, and that policy was pursued throughout which this Government, when wrenched by civil war, so strenuously insisted upon on the part of European nations. The Itata, an armed vessel commanded by a naval officer of the insurgent fleet, manned by its sailors and with soldiers on board, was seized under process of the United States court at San Diego, Cal., for a violation of our neutrality laws. While in the custody of an officer of the court the vessel was forcibly wrested from his control and put to sea. It would have been inconsistent with the dignity and self-respect of this Government not to have insisted that the Itata should be returned to San Diego to abide the judgment of the court. This was so clear to the Junta of the Congressional party, established at Iquique, that, before the arrival of the Itata at that port, the secretary of foreign relations of the Provisional Government addressed to Rear-Admiral Brown, commanding the United States naval forces, a communication from which the following is an extract:

> The Provisional Government has learned by the cablegrams of the Associated Press that the transport Itata, detained in San Diego by order of the United States for taking on board munitions of war, and in possession of the marshal, left the port, carrying on board this official, who was landed at a point near the coast, and then continued her voyage. * * * If this news be correct this Government would deplore the conduct of the Itata, and, as an evidence that it is not disposed to support or agree to the infraction of the laws of the United States, the undersigned takes advantage of the personal relations you have been good enough to maintain with him since your arrival in this port to declare to you that as soon as she is within reach of our orders his Government will put the Itata, with the arms and munitions she took on board in San Diego, at the disposition of the United States.

A trial in the district court of the United States for the southern district of California has recently resulted in a decision holding, among other things, that, inasmuch as the Congressional party had not been recognized as a belligerent, the acts done in its interest could not be a violation of our neutrality laws. From this judgment the United States has appealed, not that the condemnation of the vessel is a matter of importance, but that we may know what the present state of our law is; for, if this construction of the statute is correct, there is obvious necessity for revision and amendment.

During the progress of the war in Chile this Government tendered its good offices to bring about a peaceful adjustment, and it was at one time hoped that a good result might be reached; but in this we were disappointed.

The instructions to our naval officers and to our minister at Santiago, from the first to the last of this struggle, enjoined upon them the most impartial treatment and absolute noninterference. I am satisfied that these instructions were observed and that our representatives were always watchful to use their influence impartially in the interest of humanity, and, on more than one occasion, did so effectively. We could not forget, however, that this Government was in diplomatic relations with the then established Government of Chile, as it is now in such relations with the successor of that Government. I am quite sure that President Montt, who has, under circumstances of promise for the peace of Chile, been installed as President of that Republic, will not desire that, in the unfortunate event of any revolt against his authority, the policy of this Government should be other than that which we have recently observed. No official complaint of the conduct of our minister or of our naval officers during the struggle has been presented to this Government; and it is a matter of regret that so many of our own people should have given ear to unofficial charges and complaints that manifestly had their origin in rival interests and in a wish to pervert the relations of the United States with Chile.

The collapse of the government of Balmaceda brought about a condition which is unfortunately too familiar in the history of the Central and South American States. With the overthrow of the Balmaceda government he and many of his councilors and officers became at once fugitives for their lives and appealed to the commanding officers of the foreign naval vessels in the harbor of Valparaiso and to the resident foreign ministers at Santiago for asylum. This asylum was freely given, according to my information, by the naval vessels of several foreign powers and by several of the legations at Santiago. The American minister, as well as his colleagues, acting upon the impulses of humanity, extended asylum to political refugees whose lives were in peril. I have not been willing to direct the surrender of such of these persons as are still in the American legation without suitable conditions.

It is believed that the Government of Chile is not in a position, in view of the precedents with which it has been connected, to broadly deny the right of asylum, and the correspondence has not thus far presented any such denial. The treatment of our minister for a time was such as to call for a decided protest, and it was very gratifying to observe that unfriendly measures, which were undoubtedly the result of the prevailing excitement, were at once rescinded or suitably relaxed.

On the 16th of October an event occurred in Valparaiso so serious and tragic in its circumstances and results as to very justly excite the indignation of our people and to call for prompt and decided action on the part of this Government. A considerable number of the sailors of the United States steamship Baltimore, then in the harbor at Valparaiso, being upon shore leave and unarmed, were assaulted by armed men nearly simultaneously in different localities in the city. One petty officer was killed outright and seven or eight seamen were seriously wounded, one of whom has since died. So savage and brutal was the assault that several of our sailors received more than two and one as many as eighteen stab wounds. An investigation of the affair was promptly made by a board of officers of the Baltimore, and their report shows that these assaults were unprovoked, that our men were conducting themselves in a peaceable and orderly manner, and that some of the police of the city took part in the assault and used their weapons with fatal effect, while a few others, with some well-disposed citizens, endeavored to protect our men. Thirty-six of our sailors were arrested, and some of them, while being taken to prison, were cruelly beaten and maltreated. The fact that they were all discharged, no criminal charge being lodged against any one of them, shows very clearly that they were innocent of any breach of the peace.

So far as I have yet been able to learn no other explanation of this bloody work has been suggested than that it had its origin in hostility to these men as sailors of the United States, wearing the uniform of their Government, and not in any individual act or personal animosity. The attention of the Chilean Government was at once called to this affair, and a statement of the facts obtained by the investigation we had conducted was submitted, accompanied by a request to be advised of any other or qualifying facts in the possession of the Chilean Government that might tend to relieve this affair of the appearance of an insult to this Government. The Chilean Government was also advised that if such qualifying facts did not exist this Government would confidently expect full and prompt reparation.

It is to be regretted that the reply of the secretary for foreign affairs of the Provisional Government was couched in an offensive tone. To this no response has been made. This Government is now awaiting the result of an investigation which has been conducted by the criminal court at Valparaiso. It is reported unofficially that the investigation is about completed, and it is expected that the result will soon be communicated to this Government, together with some adequate and satisfactory response to the note by which the attention of Chile was called to this incident. If these just expectations should be disappointed or further needless delay intervene, I will, by a special message, bring this matter again to the attention of Congress for such action as may be necessary. The entire correspondence with the Government of Chile will at an early day be submitted to Congress.

I renew the recommendation of my special message, dated January 16, 1890, for the adoption of the necessary legislation to enable this Government to apply in the case of Sweden and Norway the same rule in respect to the levying of tonnage dues as was claimed and secured to the shipping of the United States in 1828 under article 8 of the treaty of 1827.

The adjournment of the Senate without action on the pending acts for the suppression of the slave traffic in Africa and for the reform of the revenue tariff of the Independent State of the Congo left this Government unable to exchange those acts on the date fixed, July 2, 1891. A modus vivendi has been concluded by which the power of the Congo State to levy duties on imports is left unimpaired, and, by agreement of all the signatories to the general slave-trade act, the time for the exchange of ratifications on the part of the United States has been extended to February 2, 1892.

The late outbreak against foreigners in various parts of the Chinese Empire has been a cause of deep concern in view of the numerous establishments of our citizens in the interior of that country. This Government can do no less than insist upon a continuance of the protective and punitory measures which the Chinese Government has heretofore applied. No effort will be omitted to protect our citizens peaceably sojourning in China, but recent unofficial information indicates that what was at first regarded as an outbreak of mob violence against foreigners has assumed the larger form of an insurrection against public order.

The Chinese Government has declined to receive Mr. Blair as the minister of the United States on the ground that, as a participant, while a Senator, in the enactment of the existing legislation against the introduction of Chinese laborers, he has become unfriendly and objectionable to China. I have felt constrained to point out to the Chinese Government the untenableness of this position, which seems to rest as much on the unacceptability of our legislation as on that of the person chosen, and which, if admitted, would practically debar the selection of any representative so long as the existing laws remain in force.

You will be called upon to consider the expediency of making special provision by law for the temporary admission of some Chinese artisans and laborers in connection with the exhibit of Chinese industries at the approaching Columbian Exposition. I regard it as desirable that the Chinese exhibit be facilitated in every proper way.

A question has arisen with the Government of Spain touching the rights of American citizens in the Caroline Islands. Our citizens there, long prior to the confirmation of Spain's claim to the islands, had secured by settlement and purchase certain rights to the recognition and maintenance of which the faith of Spain was pledged. I have had reason within the past year very strongly to protest against the failure to carry out this pledge on the part of His Majesty's ministers, which has resulted in great injustice and injury to the American residents.

The Government and people of Spain propose to celebrate the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America by holding an exposition at Madrid, which will open on the 12th of September and continue until the 31st of December, 1892. A cordial invitation has been extended to the United States to take part in this commemoration, and, as Spain was one of the first nations to express the intention to participate in the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago, it would be very appropriate for this Government to give this invitation its friendly promotion.

Surveys for the connecting links of the projected Intercontinental Railway are in progress, not only in Mexico, but at various points along the course mapped out. Three surveying parties are now in the field under the direction of the commission. Nearly 1,000 miles of the proposed road have been surveyed, including the most difficult part, that through Ecuador and the southern part of Colombia. The reports of the engineers are very satisfactory and show that no insurmountable obstacles have been met with.

On November 12, 1884, a treaty was concluded with Mexico reaffirming the boundary between the two countries as described in the treaties of February 2, 1848, and December 30, 1853. March 1, 1889, a further treaty was negotiated to facilitate the carrying out of the principles of the treaty of 1884 and to avoid the difficulties occasioned by reason of the changes and alterations that take place from natural causes in the Rio Grande and Colorado Rivers in the portions thereof constituting the boundary line between the two Republics. The International Boundary Commission, provided for by the treaty of 1889, to have exclusive jurisdiction of any question that may arise, has been named by the Mexican Government. An appropriation is necessary to enable the United States to fulfill its treaty obligations in this respect.

The death of King Kalakaua in the United States afforded occasion to testify our friendship for Hawaii by conveying the King's body to his own land in a naval vessel with all due honors. The Government of his successor, Queen Liliuokalani, is seeking to promote closer commercial relations with the United States. Surveys for the much-needed submarine cable from our Pacific coast to Honolulu are in progress, and this enterprise should have the suitable promotion of the two Governments. I strongly recommend that provision be made for improving the harbor of Pearl River and equipping it as a naval station.

The arbitration treaty formulated by the International American Conference lapsed by reason of the failure to exchange ratifications fully within the limit of time provided; but several of the governments concerned have expressed a desire to save this important result of the conference by an extension of the period.

It is, in my judgment, incumbent upon the United States to conserve the influential initiative it has taken in this measure by ratifying the instrument and by advocating the proposed extension of the time for exchange. These views have been made known to the other signatories.

This Government has found occasion to express, in a friendly spirit, but with much earnestness, to the Government of the Czar, its serious concern because of the harsh measures now being enforced against the Hebrews in Russia. By the revival of antisemitic laws, long in abeyance, great numbers of those unfortunate people have been constrained to abandon their homes and leave the Empire by reason of the impossibility of finding subsistence within the pale to which it is sought to confine them. The immigration of these people to the United States—many other countries being closed to them—is largely increasing and is likely to assume proportions which may make it difficult to find homes and employment for them here and to seriously affect the labor market. It is estimated that over one million will be forced from Russia within a few years. The Hebrew is never a beggar; he has always kept the law—life by toil—often under severe and oppressive civil restrictions. It is also true that no race, sect, or class has more fully cared for its own than the Hebrew race. But the sudden transfer of such a multitude, under conditions that tend to strip them of their small accumulations and to depress their energies and courage, is neither good for them nor for us.

The banishment, whether by direct decree or by not less certain indirect methods, of so large a number of men and women is not a local question. A decree to leave one country is, in the nature of things, an order to enter another—some other. This consideration, as well as the suggestions of humanity, furnishes ample ground for the remonstrances which we have presented to Russia, while our historic friendship for that Government can not fail to give the assurance that our representations are those of a sincere wellwisher.

The annual report of the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua shows that much costly and necessary preparatory work has been done during the year in the construction of shops, railroad tracks, and harbor piers and breakwaters, and that the work of canal construction has made some progress.

I deem it to be a matter of the highest concern to the United States that this canal, connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans and giving to us a short water communication between our ports upon those two great seas, should be speedily constructed and at the smallest practicable limit of cost. The gain in freights to the people and the direct saving to the Government of the United States in the use of its naval vessels would pay the entire cost of this work within a short series of years. The report of the Secretary of the Navy shows the saving in our naval expenditures which would result.

The Senator from Alabama (Mr. MORGAN), in his argument upon this subject before the Senate at the last session, did not overestimate the importance of this work when he said that "the canal is the most important subject now connected with the commercial growth and progress of the United States."

If this work is to be promoted by the usual financial methods and without the aid of this Government, the expenditures, in its interest-bearing securities and stocks, will probably be twice the actual cost. This will necessitate higher tolls and constitute a heavy and altogether needless burden upon our commerce and that of the world. Every dollar of the bonds and stock of the company should represent a dollar expended in the legitimate and economical prosecution of the work. This is only possible by giving to the bonds the guaranty of the United States Government. Such a guaranty would secure the ready sale at par of a 3 per cent bond from time to time as the money was needed. I do not doubt that, built upon these business methods, the canal would, when fully inaugurated, earn its fixed charges and operating expenses. But if its bonds are to be marketed at heavy discounts and every bond sold is to be accompanied by a gift of stock, as has come to be expected by investors in such enterprises, the traffic will be seriously burdened to pay interest and dividends. I am quite willing to recommend Government promotion in the prosecution of a work which, if no other means offered for securing its completion, is of such transcendent interest that the Government should, in my opinion, secure it by direct appropriations from its Treasury.

A guaranty of the bonds of the canal company to an amount necessary to the completion of the canal could, I think, be so given as not to involve any serious risk of ultimate loss. The things to be carefully guarded are the completion of the work within the limits of the guaranty, the subrogation of the United States to the rights of the first-mortgage bondholders for any amounts it may have to pay, and in the meantime a control of the stock of the company as a security against mismanagement and loss. I most sincerely hope that neither party nor sectional lines will be drawn upon this great American project, so full of interest to the people of all our States and so influential in its effects upon the prestige and prosperity of our common country.

The island of Navassa, in the West Indian group, has, under the provisions of Title VII of the Revised Statutes, been recognized by the President as appertaining to the United States. It contains guano deposits, is owned by the Navassa Phosphate Company, and is occupied solely by its employés. In September, 1889, a revolt took place among these laborers, resulting in the killing of some of the agents of the company, caused, as the laborers claimed, by cruel treatment. These men were arrested and tried in the United States court at Baltimore, under section 5576 of the statute referred to, as if the offenses had been committed on board a merchant vessel of the United States on the high seas. There appeared on the trial and otherwise came to me such evidences of the bad treatment of the men that, in consideration of this and of the fact that the men had no access to any public officer or tribunal for protection or the redress of their wrongs, I commuted the death sentences that had been passed by the court upon three of them. In April last my attention was again called to this island, and to the unregulated condition of things there, by a letter from a colored laborer, who complained that he was wrongfully detained upon the island by the phosphate company after the expiration of his contract of service. A naval vessel was sent to examine into the case of this man and generally into the condition of things on the island. It was found that the laborer referred to had been detained beyond the contract limit and that a condition of revolt again existed among the laborers. A board of naval officers reported, among other things, as follows:

> We would desire to state further that the discipline maintained on the island seems to be that of a convict establishment, without its comforts and cleanliness, and that, until more attention is paid to the shipping of laborers, by placing it under Government supervision to prevent misunderstanding and misrepresentation, and until some amelioration is shown in the treatment of the laborers, these disorders will be of constant occurrence.

I recommend legislation that shall place labor contracts upon this and other islands having the relation that Navassa has to the United States under the supervision of a court commissioner, and that shall provide, at the expense of the owners, an officer to reside upon the islands with power to judge and adjust disputes and to enforce a just and humane treatment of the employés. It is inexcusable that American laborers should be left within our own jurisdiction without access to any Government officer or tribunal for their protection and the redress of their wrongs.

International copyright has been secured, in accordance with the conditions of the act of March 3, 1891, with Belgium, France, Great Britain and the British possessions, and Switzerland, the laws of those countries permitting to our citizens the benefit of copyright on substantially the same basis as to their own citizens or subjects. With Germany a special convention has been negotiated upon this subject, which will bring that country within the reciprocal benefits of our legislation.

The general interest in the operations of the Treasury Department has been much augmented during the last year by reason of the conflicting predictions, which accompanied and followed the tariff and other legislation of the last Congress affecting the revenues, as to the results of this legislation upon the Treasury and upon the country. On the one hand it was contended that imports would so fall off as to leave the Treasury bankrupt and that the prices of articles entering into the living of the people would be so enhanced as to disastrously affect their comfort and happiness, while on the other it was argued that the loss to the revenue, largely the result of placing sugar on the free list, would be a direct gain to the people; that the prices of the necessaries of life, including those most highly protected, would not be enhanced; that labor would have a larger market and the products of the farm advanced prices; while the Treasury surplus and receipts would be adequate to meet the appropriations, including the large exceptional expenditures for the refunding to the States of the direct tax and the redemption of the 4½ per cent bonds.

It is not my purpose to enter at any length into a discussion of the effects of the legislation to which I have referred; but a brief examination of the statistics of the Treasury and a general glance at the state of business throughout the country will, I think, satisfy any impartial inquirer that its results have disappointed the evil prophecies of its opponents and in a large measure realized the hopeful predictions of its friends. Rarely, if ever before, in the history of the country has there been a time when the proceeds of one day's labor or the product of one farmed acre would purchase so large an amount of those things that enter into the living of the masses of the people. I believe that a full test will develop the fact that the tariff act of the Fifty-first Congress is very favorable in its average effect upon the prices of articles entering into common use.

During the twelve months from October 1, 1890, to September 30, 1891, the total value of our foreign commerce (imports and exports combined) was $1,747,806,406, which was the largest of any year in the history of the United States. The largest in any previous year was in 1890, when our commerce amounted to $1,647,139,093, and the last year exceeds this enormous aggregate by over one hundred millions. It is interesting, and to some will be surprising, to know that during the year ending September 30, 1891, our imports of merchandise amounted to $824,715,270, which was an increase of more than eleven million dollars over the value of the imports of the corresponding months of the preceding year, when the imports of merchandise were unusually large in anticipation of the tariff legislation then pending. The average annual value of the imports of merchandise for the ten years from 1881 to 1890 was $692,186,522, and during the year ending September 30, 1891, this annual average was exceeded by $132,528,469.

The value of free imports during the twelve months ending September 30, 1891, was $118,092,387 more than the value of free imports during the corresponding twelve months of the preceding year, and there was during the same period a decrease of $106,846,508 in the value of imports of dutiable merchandise. The percentage of merchandise admitted free of duty during the year to which I have referred, the first under the new tariff, was 48.18, while during the preceding twelve months, under the old tariff, the percentage was 34.27, an increase of 13.91 per cent. If we take the six months ending September 30 last, which covers the time during which sugars have been admitted free of duty, the per cent of value of merchandise imported free of duty is found to be 55.37, which is a larger percentage of free imports than during any prior fiscal year in the history of the Government.

If we turn to exports of merchandise the statistics are full of gratification. The value of such exports of merchandise for the twelve months ending September 30, 1891, was $923,091,136, while for the corresponding previous twelve months it was $860,177,115, an increase of $62,914,021, which is nearly three times the average annual increase of exports of merchandise for the preceding twenty years; this exceeds in amount and value the exports of merchandise during any year in the history of the Government. The increase in the value of exports of agricultural products during the year referred to over the corresponding twelve months of the prior year was $45,846,197, while the increase in the value of exports of manufactured products was $16,838,240.

There is certainly nothing in the condition of trade, foreign or domestic, there is certainly nothing in the condition of our people of any class, to suggest that the existing tariff and revenue legislation bears oppressively upon the people or retards the commercial development of the nation. It may be argued that our condition would be better if tariff legislation were upon a free-trade basis; but it can not be denied that all the conditions of prosperity and of general contentment are present in a larger degree than ever before in our history, and that, too, just when it was prophesied they would be in the worst state. Agitation for radical changes in tariff and financial legislation can not help, but may seriously impede, business, to the prosperity of which some degree of stability in legislation is essential.

I think there are conclusive evidences that the new tariff has created several great industries which will, within a few years, give employment to several hundred thousand American working men and women. In view of the somewhat overcrowded condition of the labor market of the United States every patriotic citizen should rejoice at such a result.

The report of the Secretary of the Treasury shows that the total receipts of the Government, from all sources, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, were $458,544,233.03, while the expenditures for the same period were $421,304,470.46, leaving a surplus of $37,239,762.57.

The receipts of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1892, actual and estimated, are $433,000,000 and the expenditures $409,000,000. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, the estimated receipts are $455,336,350 and the expenditures $441,300,093.

Under the law of July 14, 1890, the Secretary of the Treasury has purchased (since August 13) during the fiscal year 48,393,113 ounces of silver bullion at an average cost of $1.045 per ounce. The highest price paid during the year was $1.2025, and the lowest, $0.9636. In exchange for this silver bullion there have been issued $50,577,498 of the Treasury notes authorized by the act. The lowest price of silver reached during the fiscal year was $0.9636, on April 22, 1891; but on November 1 the market price was only $0.96, which would give to the silver dollar a bullion value of 74¼ cents.

Before the influence of the prospective silver legislation was felt in the market silver was worth in New York about $0.955 per ounce. The ablest advocates of free coinage in the last Congress were most confident in their predictions that the purchases by the Government required by the law would at once bring the price of silver to $1.2929 per ounce, which would make the bullion value of a dollar 100 cents and hold it there. The prophecies of the anti-silver men of disasters to result from the coinage of $2,000,000 per month were not wider of the mark. The friends of free silver are not agreed, I think, as to the causes that brought their hopeful predictions to naught. Some facts are known. The exports of silver from London to India during the first nine months of this calendar year fell off over 50 per cent, or $17,202,730, compared with the same months of the preceding year. The exports of domestic silver bullion from this country, which had averaged for the last ten years over $17,000,000, fell in the last fiscal year to $13,797,391; while, for the first time in recent years, the imports of silver into this country exceeded the exports by the sum of $2,745,365. In the previous year the net exports of silver from the United States amounted to $8,545,455. The production of the United States increased from 50,000,000 ounces in 1889 to 54,500,000 in 1890, The Government is now buying and putting aside annually 54,000,000 ounces, which, allowing for 7,140,000 ounces of new bullion used in the arts, is 6,640,000 more than our domestic product available for coinage.

I hope the depression in the price of silver is temporary and that a further trial of this legislation will more favorably affect it. That the increased volume of currency thus supplied for the use of the people was needed and that beneficial results upon trade and prices have followed this legislation I think must be very clear to everyone; nor should it be forgotten that for every dollar of these notes issued a full dollar's worth of silver bullion is at the time deposited in the Treasury as a security for its redemption. Upon this subject, as upon the tariff, my recommendation is that the existing laws be given a full trial and that our business interests be spared the distressing influence which threats of radical changes always impart. Under existing legislation it is in the power of the Treasury Department to maintain that essential condition of national finance as well as of commercial prosperity—the parity in use of the coin dollars and their paper representatives. The assurance that these powers would be freely and unhesitatingly used has done much to produce and sustain the present favorable business conditions.

I am still of the opinion that the free coinage of silver under existing conditions would disastrously affect our business interests at home and abroad. We could not hope to maintain an equality in the purchasing power of the gold and silver dollar in our own markets, and in foreign trade the stamp gives no added value to the bullion contained in coins. The producers of the country, its farmers and laborers, have the highest interest that every dollar, paper or coin, issued by the Government shall be as good as any other. If there is one less valuable than another its sure and constant errand will be to pay them for their toil and for their crops. The money-lender will protect himself by stipulating for payment in gold, but the laborer has never been able to do that. To place business upon a silver basis would mean a sudden and severe contraction of the currency, by the withdrawal of gold and gold notes, and such an unsettling of all values as would produce a commercial panic. I can not believe that a people so strong and prosperous as ours will promote such a policy.

The producers of silver are entitled to just consideration, but they should not forget that the Government is now buying and putting out of the market what is the equivalent of the entire product of our silver mines. This is more than they themselves thought of asking two years ago. I believe it is the earnest desire of a great majority of the people, as it is mine, that a full coin use shall be made of silver just as soon as the coöperation of other nations can be secured and a ratio fixed that will give circulation equally to gold and silver. The business of the world requires the use of both metals; but I do not see any prospect of gain, but much of loss, by giving up the present system, in which a full use is made of gold and a large use of silver, for one in which silver alone will circulate. Such an event would be at once fatal to the further progress of the silver movement. Bimetallism is the desired end, and the true friends of silver will be careful not to overrun the goal and bring in silver monometallism, with its necessary attendants, the loss of our gold to Europe and the relief of the pressure there for a larger currency. I have endeavored by the use of official and unofficial agencies to keep a close observation of the state of public sentiment in Europe upon this question, and have not found it to be such as to justify me in proposing an international conference. There is, however, I am sure, a growing sentiment in Europe in favor of a larger use of silver, and I know of no more effectual way of promoting this sentiment than by accumulating gold here. A scarcity of gold in the European reserves will be the most persuasive argument for the use of silver.

The exports of gold to Europe, which began in February last and continued until the close of July, aggregated over $70,000,000. The net loss of gold during the fiscal year was nearly $68,000,000. That no serious monetary disturbance resulted was most gratifying, and gave to Europe fresh evidence of the strength and stability of our financial institutions. With the movement of crops the outflow of gold was speedily stopped and a return set in. Up to December 1 we had recovered of our gold loss at the port of New York $27,854,000, and it is confidently believed that during the winter and spring this aggregate will be steadily and largely increased.

The presence of a large cash surplus in the Treasury has for many years been the subject of much unfavorable criticism and has furnished an argument to those who have desired to place the tariff upon a purely revenue basis. It was agreed by all that the withdrawal from circulation of so large an amount of money was an embarrassment to the business of the country and made necessary the intervention of the Department at frequent intervals to relieve threatened monetary panics. The surplus on March 1, 1889, was $183,827,190.29. The policy of applying this surplus to the redemption of the interest-bearing securities of the United States was thought to be preferable to that of depositing it without interest in selected national banks. There have been redeemed since the date last mentioned of interest-bearing securities $259,079,350, resulting in a reduction of the annual interest charge of $11,684,675. The money which had been deposited in banks without interest has been gradually withdrawn and used in the redemption of bonds.

The result of this policy, of the silver legislation, and of the refunding of the 4½ per cent bonds has been a large increase of the money in circulation. At the date last named the circulation was $1,404,205,896, or $23.03 per capita, while on the 1st day of December, 1891, it had increased to $1,577,262,070, or 24.38 per capita. The offer of the Secretary of the Treasury to the holders of the 4½ per cent bonds to extend the time of redemption, at the option of the Government, at an interest of 2 per cent, was accepted by the holders of about one-half the amount, and the unextended bonds are being redeemed on presentation.

The report of the Secretary of War exhibits the results of an intelligent, progressive, and business-like administration of a Department which has been too much regarded as one of mere routine. The separation of Secretary Proctor from the Department by reason of his appointment as a Senator from the State of Vermont is a source of great regret to me and to his colleagues in the Cabinet, as I am sure it will be to all those who have had business with the Department while under his charge.

In the administration of army affairs some especially good work has been accomplished. The efforts of the Secretary to reduce the percentage of desertions by removing the causes that promoted it have been so successful as to enable him to report for the last year a lower percentage of desertion than has been before reached in the history of the Army. The resulting money saving is considerable, but the improvement in the morale of the enlisted men is the most valuable incident of the reforms which have brought about this result.

The work of securing sites for shore batteries for harbor defense and the manufacture of mortars and guns of high power to equip them have made good progress during the year. The preliminary work of tests and plans, which so long delayed a start, is now out of the way. Some guns have been completed, and with an enlarged shop and a more complete equipment at Watervliet the Army will soon be abreast of the Navy in gun construction. Whatever unavoidable causes of delay may arise, there should be none from delayed or insufficient appropriations. We shall be greatly embarrassed in the proper distribution and use of naval vessels until adequate shore defenses are provided for our harbors.

I concur in the recommendation of the Secretary that the three-battalion organization be adopted for the infantry. The adoption of a smokeless powder and of a modern rifle equal in range, precision, and rapidity of fire to the best now in use will, I hope, not be longer delayed.

The project of enlisting Indians and organizing them into separate companies upon the same basis as other soldiers was made the subject of very careful study by the Secretary and received my approval. Seven companies have been completely organized and seven more are in process of organization. The results of six months' training have more than realized the highest anticipations. The men are readily brought under discipline, acquire the drill with facility, and show great pride in the right discharge of their duties and perfect loyalty to their officers, who declare that they would take them into action with confidence. The discipline, order, and cleanliness of the military posts will have a wholesome and elevating influence upon the men enlisted, and through them upon their tribes, while a more friendly feeling for the whites and a greater respect for the Government will certainly be promoted.

The great work done in the record and pension division of the War Department by Maj. Ainsworth, of the Medical Corps, and the clerks under him, is entitled to honorable mention. Taking up the work with nearly 41,000 cases behind, he closed the last fiscal year without a single case left over, though the new cases had increased 52 per cent in number over the previous year by reason of the pension legislation of the last Congress

I concur in the recommendation of the Attorney-General that the right in felony cases to a review by the Supreme Court be limited. It would seem that personal liberty would have a safe guaranty if the right of review in cases involving only fine and imprisonment were limited to the circuit court of appeals, unless a constitutional question should in some way be involved.

The judges of the Court of Private Land Claims, provided for by the act of March 3, 1891, have been appointed and the court organized. It is now possible to give early relief to communities long repressed in their development by unsettled land titles and to establish the possession and right of settlers whose lands have been rendered valueless by adverse and unfounded claims.

The act of July 9, 1888, provided for the incorporation and management of a reform school for girls in the District of Columbia; but it has remained inoperative for the reason that no appropriation has been made for construction or maintenance. The need of such an institution is very urgent. Many girls could be saved from depraved lives by the wholesome influences and restraints of such a school. I recommend that the necessary appropriation be made for a site and for construction.

The enforcement by the Treasury Department of the law prohibiting the coming of Chinese to the United States has been effective as to such as seek to land from vessels entering our ports. The result has been to divert the travel to vessels entering the ports of British Columbia, whence passage into the United States at obscure points along the Dominion boundary is easy. A very considerable number of Chinese laborers have during the past year entered the United States from Canada and Mexico.

The officers of the Treasury Department and of the Department of Justice have used every means at their command to intercept this immigration, but the impossibility of perfectly guarding our extended frontier is apparent. The Dominion Government collects a head tax of $50 from every Chinaman entering Canada, and thus derives a considerable revenue from those who only use its ports to reach a position of advantage to evade our exclusion laws. There seems to be satisfactory evidence that the business of passing Chinamen through Canada to the United States is organized and quite active. The Department of Justice has construed the laws to require the return of any Chinaman found to be unlawfully in this country to China as the country from which he came, notwithstanding the fact that he came by way of Canada; but several of the district courts have, in cases brought before them, overruled this view of the law and decided that such persons must be returned to Canada. This construction robs the law of all effectiveness, even if the decrees could be executed, for the men returned can the next day recross our border. But the only appropriation made is for sending them back to China, and the Canadian officials refuse to allow them to reënter Canada without the payment of the $50 head tax. I recommend such legislation as will remedy these defects in the law.

In previous messages I have called the attention of Congress to the necessity of so extending the jurisdiction of the United States courts as to make triable therein any felony committed while in the act of violating a law of the United States. These courts can not have that independence and effectiveness which the Constitution contemplates so long as the felonious killing of court officers, jurors, and witnesses in the discharge of their duties or by reason of their acts as such is only cognizable in the State courts. The work done by the Attorney-General and the officers of his Department, even under the present inadequate legislation, has produced some notable results in the interest of law and order.

The Attorney-General and also the Commissioners of the District of Columbia call attention to the defectiveness and inadequacy of the laws relating to crimes against chastity in the District of Columbia. A stringent code upon this subject has been provided by Congress for Utah, and it is a matter of surprise that the needs of this District should have been so long overlooked.

In the report of the Postmaster-General some very gratifying results are exhibited and many betterments of the service suggested. A perusal of the report gives abundant evidence that the supervision and direction of the postal system have been characterized by an intelligent and conscientious desire to improve the service. The revenues of the Department show an increase of over five millions of dollars, with a deficiency for the year 1892 of less than four millions of dollars, while the estimate for the year 1893 shows a surplus of receipts over expenditures.

Ocean mail post-offices have been established upon the steamers of the North German Lloyd and Hamburg lines, saving, by the distribution on shipboard, from two to fourteen hours' time in the delivery of mail at the port of entry and often much more than this in the delivery at interior places. So thoroughly has this system, initiated by Germany and the United States, evidenced it usefulness that it can not be long before it is installed upon all the great ocean mail-carrying steamships.

Eight thousand miles of new postal service has been established upon railroads, the car distribution to substations in the great cities has been increased about 12 per cent, while the percentage of errors in distribution has during the past year been reduced over one-half. An appropriation was given by the last Congress for the purpose of making some experiments in free delivery in the smaller cities and towns. The results of these experiments have been so satisfactory that the Postmaster-General recommends, and I concur in the recommendation, that the free-delivery system be at once extended to towns of 5,000 population. His discussion of the inadequate facilities extended under our present system to rural communities and his suggestions with a view to give these communities a fuller participation in the benefits of the postal service are worthy of your careful consideration. It is not just that the farmer, who receives his mail at a neighboring town, should not only be compelled to send to the post-office for it but to pay a considerable rent for a box in which to place it or to wait his turn at a general-delivery window, while the city resident has his mail brought to his door. It is stated that over 54,000 neighborhoods are, under the present system, receiving mail at post-offices where money orders and postal notes are not issued. The extension of this system to these communities is especially desirable, as the patrons of such offices are not possessed of the other facilities offered in more populous communities for the transmission of small sums of money.

I have, in a message to the preceding Congress, expressed my views as to a modified use of the telegraph in connection with the postal service.

In pursuance of the ocean-mail law of March 3, 1891, and after a most careful study of the whole subject and frequent conferences with shipowners, boards of trade, and others, advertisements were issued by the Postmaster-General for 53 lines of ocean-mail service: 10 to Great Britain and the Continent, 27 to South America, 3 to China and Japan, 4 to Australia and the Pacific islands, 7 to the West Indies, and 2 to Mexico. It was not, of course, expected that bids for all these lines would be received or that service upon them all would be contracted for. It was intended, in furtherance of the act, to secure as many new lines as possible, while including in the list most or all of the foreign lines now occupied by American ships. It was hoped that a line to England and perhaps one to the Continent would be secured; but the outlay required to equip such lines wholly with new ships of the first class and the difficulty of establishing new lines in competition with those already established deterred bidders whose interest had been enlisted. It is hoped that a way may yet be found of overcoming these difficulties.

The Brazil Steamship Company, by reason of a miscalculation as to the speed of its vessels, was not able to bid under the terms of the advertisement. The policy of the Department was to secure from the established lines an improved service as a condition of giving to them the benefits of the law. This in all instances has been attained. The Postmaster-General estimates that an expenditure in American shipyards of about ten millions of dollars will be necessary to enable the bidders to construct the ships called for by the service which they have accepted. I do not think there is any reason for discouragement or for any turning back from the policy of this legislation. Indeed, a good beginning has been made, and as the subject is further considered and understood by capitalists and shipping people new lines will be ready to meet future proposals, and we may date from the passage of this law the revival of American shipping interests and the recovery of a fair share of the carrying trade of the world. We were receiving for foreign postage nearly two millions of dollars under the old system, and the outlay for ocean mail service did not exceed $600,000 per annum. It is estimated by the Postmaster-General that, if all the contracts proposed are completed, it will require $247,354 for this year, in addition to the appropriation for sea and inland postage already in the estimates, and that for the next fiscal year, ending June 30, 1893, there would probably be needed about $560,000.

The report of the Secretary of the Navy shows a gratifying increase of new naval vessels in commission. The Newark, Concord, Bennington, and Miantonomoh have been added during the year, with an aggregate of something more than 11,000 tons. Twenty-four war ships of all classes are now under construction in the navy-yards and private shops, but while the work upon them is going forward satisfactorily the completion of the more important vessels will yet require about a year's time. Some of the vessels now under construction, it is believed, will be triumphs of naval engineering. When it is recollected that the work of building a modern navy was only initiated in the year 1883, that our naval constructors and shipbuilders were practically without experience in the construction of large iron or steel ships, that our engine shops were unfamiliar with great marine engines, and that the manufacture of steel forgings for guns and plates was almost wholly a foreign industry, the progress that has been made is not only highly satisfactory, but furnishes the assurance that the United States will before long attain, in the construction of such vessels, with their engines and armaments, the same preëminence which it attained when the best instrument of ocean commerce was the clipper ship and the most impressive exhibit of naval power the old wooden three-decker man-of-war. The officers of the Navy and the proprietors and engineers of our great private shops have responded with wonderful intelligence and professional zeal to the confidence expressed by Congress in its liberal legislation. We have now at Washington a gun shop, organized and conducted by naval officers, that in its system, economy, and product is unexcelled. Experiments with armor plate have been conducted during the year with most important results. It is now believed that a plate of higher resisting power than any in use has been found and that the tests have demonstrated that cheaper methods of manufacture than those heretofore thought necessary can be used.

I commend to your favorable consideration the recommendations of the Secretary, who has, I am sure, given to them the most conscientious study. There should be no hesitation in promptly completing a navy of the best modern type, large enough to enable this country to display its flag in all seas for the protection of its citizens and of its extending commerce. The world needs no assurance of the peaceful purposes of the United States, but we shall probably be in the future more largely a competitor in the commerce of the world, and it is essential to the dignity of this nation and to that peaceful influence which it should exercise on this hemisphere that its Navy should be adequate, both upon the shores of the Atlantic and of the Pacific.

The report of the Secretary of the Interior shows that a very gratifying progress has been made in all of the bureaus which make up that complex and difficult Department.

The work in the Bureau of Indian Affairs was perhaps never so large as now, by reason of the numerous negotiations which have been proceeding with the tribes for a reduction of the reservations, with the incident labor of making allotments, and was never more carefully conducted. The provision of adequate school facilities for Indian children and the locating of adult Indians upon farms involve the solution of the "Indian question." Everything else—rations, annuities, and tribal negotiations, with the agents, inspectors, and commissioners who distribute and conduct them—must pass away when the Indian has become a citizen, secure in the individual ownership of a farm from which he derives his subsistence by his own labor, protected by and subordinate to the laws which govern the white man, and provided by the General Government or by the local communities in which he lives with the means of educating his children. When an Indian becomes a citizen in an organized State or Territory his relation to the General Government ceases, in great measure, to be that of a ward; but the General Government ought not at once to put upon the State or Territory the burden of the education of his children.

It has been my thought that the Government schools and school buildings upon the reservations would be absorbed by the school systems of the States and Territories; but, as it has been found necessary to protect the Indian against the compulsory alienation of his land by exempting him from taxation for a period of twenty-five years, it would seem to be right that the General Government, certainly where there are tribal funds in its possession, should pay to the school fund of the State what would be equivalent to the local school tax upon the property of the Indian. It will be noticed from the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that already some contracts have been made with district schools for the education of Indian children. There is great advantage, I think, in bringing the Indian children into mixed schools. This process will be gradual, and in the mean time the present educational provisions and arrangements, the result of the best experience of those who have been charged with this work, should be continued. This will enable those religious bodies that have undertaken the work of Indian education with so much zeal, and with results so restraining and beneficent, to place their institutions in new and useful relations to the Indian and to his white neighbors.

The outbreak among the Sioux, which occurred in December last, is as to its causes and incidents fully reported upon by the War Department and the Department of the Interior. That these Indians had some just complaints, especially in the matter of the reduction of the appropriation for rations and in the delays attending the enactment of laws to enable the Department to perform the engagements entered into with them, is probably true; but the Sioux tribes are naturally warlike and turbulent, and their warriors were excited by their medicine men and chiefs, who preached the coming of an Indian Messiah who was to give them power to destroy their enemies. In view of the alarm that prevailed among the white settlers near the reservation and of the fatal consequences that would have resulted from an Indian incursion, I placed at the disposal of Gen. Miles, commanding the Division of the Missouri, all such forces as were thought by him to be required. He is entitled to the credit of having given thorough protection to the settlers and of bringing the hostiles into subjection with the least possible loss of life.

The appropriation of $2,991,450 for the Choctaws and Chickasaws, contained in the general Indian appropriation bill of March 3, 1891, has not been expended, for the reason that I have not yet approved a release (to the Government) of the Indian claim to the lands mentioned. This matter will be made the subject of a special message, placing before Congress all the facts which have come to my knowledge.

The relation of the five civilized tribes now occupying the Indian Territory to the United States is not, I believe, that best calculated to promote the highest advancement of these Indians. That there should be within our borders five independent states, having no relations, except those growing out of treaties, with the Government of the United States, no representation in the National Legislature, its people not citizens, is a startling anomaly.

It seems to me to be inevitable that there shall be before long some organic changes in the relation of these people to the United States. What form these changes should take I do not think it desirable now to suggest, even if they were well defined in my own mind. They should certainly involve the acceptance of citizenship by the Indians and a representation in Congress. These Indians should have opportunity to present their claims and grievances upon the floor rather than, as now, in the lobby. If a commission could be appointed to visit these tribes to confer with them in a friendly spirit upon this whole subject, even if no agreement were presently reached, the feeling of the tribes upon this question would be developed and discussion would prepare the way for changes which must come sooner or later.

The good work of reducing the larger Indian reservations, by allotments in severalty to the Indians and the cession of the remaining lands to the United States for disposition under the homestead law, has been prosecuted during the year with energy and success. In September last I was enabled to open to settlement in the Territory of Oklahoma 900,000 acres of land, all of which was taken up by settlers in a single day. The rush for these lands was accompanied by a great deal of excitement, but was, happily, free from incidents of violence.

It was a source of great regret that I was not able to open at the same time the surplus lands of the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Reservation, amounting to about 3,000,000 acres, by reason of the insufficiency of the appropriation for making the allotments. Deserving and impatient settlers are waiting to occupy these lands, and I urgently recommend that a special deficiency appropriation be promptly made of the small amount needed, so that the allotments may be completed and the surplus lands opened in time to permit the settlers to get upon their homesteads in the early spring.

During the past summer the Cherokee Commission have completed arrangements with the Wichita, Kickapoo, and Tonkawa tribes, whereby, if the agreements are ratified by Congress, over 800,000 additional acres will be opened to settlement in Oklahoma.

The negotiations for the release by the Cherokees of their claim to the Cherokee Strip has made no substantial progress, so far as the Department is officially advised, but it is still hoped that the cession of this large and valuable tract may be secured. The price which the Commission was authorized to offer—one dollar and a quarter per acre—is, in my judgment, when all the circumstances as to title and the character of the lands are considered, a fair and adequate one and should have been accepted by the Indians.

Since March 4, 1889, about 23,000,000 acres have been separated from Indian reservations and added to the public domain for the use of those who desired to secure free homes under our beneficent laws. It is difficult to estimate the increase of wealth which will result from the conversion of these waste lands into farms, but it is more difficult to estimate the betterment which will result to the families that have found renewed hope and courage in the ownership of a home and the assurance of a comfortable subsistence under free and healthful conditions. It is also gratifying to be able to feel, as we may, that this work has proceeded upon lines of justice towards the Indian, and that he may now, if he will, secure to himself the good influences of a settled habitation, the fruits of industry, and the security of citizenship.

Early in this administration a special effort was begun to bring up the work of the General Land Office. By faithful work the arrearages have been rapidly reduced. At the end of the last fiscal year only 84,172 final agricultural entries remained undisposed of, and the Commissioner reports that, with the present force, the work can be fully brought up by the end of the next fiscal year.

Your attention is called to the difficulty presented by the Secretary of the Interior as to the administration of the law of March 3, 1891, establishing a Court of Private Land Claims. The small holdings intended to be protected by the law are estimated to be more than fifteen thousand in number. The claimants are a most deserving class and their titles are supported by the strongest equities. The difficulty grows out of the fact that the lands have largely been surveyed according to our methods, while the holdings, many of which have been in the same family for generations, are laid out in narrow strips a few rods wide upon a stream and running back to the hills for pasturage and timber. Provision should be made for numbering these tracts as lots and for patenting them by such numbers, and without reference to section lines.

The administration of the Pension Bureau has been characterized during the year by great diligence. The total number of pensioners upon the roll on the 30th day of June, 1891, was 676,160. There were allowed during the fiscal year ending at that time 250,565 cases. Of this number 102,387 were allowed under the law of June 27, 1890. The issuing of certificates has been proceeding at the rate of about 30,000 per month, about 75 per cent of these being cases under the new law. The Commissioner expresses the opinion that he will be able to carefully adjudicate and allow 350,000 claims during the present fiscal year. The appropriation for the payment of pensions for the fiscal year 1890-'91 was $127,685,793.89, and the amount expended $118,530,649.25, leaving an unexpended surplus of $9,155,144.64.

The Commissioner is quite confident that there will be no call this year for a deficiency appropriation, notwithstanding the rapidity with which the work is being pushed. The mistake which has been made by many in their exaggerated estimates of the cost of pensions is in not taking account of the diminished value of first payments under the recent legislation. These payments, under the general law, have been for many years very large, as the pensions, when allowed, dated from the time of filing claim, and most of these claims had been pending for years. The first payments under the law of June, 1890, are relatively small, and as the per cent of these cases increases and that of the old cases diminishes, the annual aggregate of first payments is largely reduced. The Commissioner, under date of November 13, furnishes me with the statement that during the last four months 113,175 certificates were issued, 27,893 under the general law and 85,282 under the act of June 27, 1890. The average first payment during these four months was $131.85, while the average first payment upon cases allowed during the year ending June 30, 1891, was $239.33, being a reduction in the average first payments during these four months of $107.48.

The estimate for pension expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, is $144,956,000, which, after a careful examination of the subject, the Commissioner is of the opinion will be sufficient. While these disbursements to the disabled soldiers of the great civil war are large, they do not realize the exaggerated estimates of those who oppose this beneficent legislation. The Secretary of the Interior shows with great fullness the care that is taken to exclude fraudulent claims, and also the gratifying fact that the persons to whom these pensions are going are men who rendered not slight but substantial war service.

The report of the Commissioner of Railroads shows that the total debt of the subsidized railroads to the United States was, on December 31, 1890, $112,512,613.06. A large part of this debt is now fast approaching maturity, with no adequate provision for its payment. Some policy for dealing with this debt, with a view to its ultimate collection, should be at once adopted. It is very difficult, well-nigh impossible, for so large a body as the Congress to conduct the necessary negotiations and investigations. I therefore recommend that provision be made for the appointment of a commission to agree upon and report a plan for dealing with this debt.

The work of the Census Bureau is now far in advance and the great bulk of the enormous labor involved completed. It will be more strictly a statistical exhibit and less encumbered by essays than its immediate predecessors. The methods pursued have been fair, careful, and intelligent, and have secured the approval of the statisticians, who have followed them with a scientific and nonpartisan interest. The appropriations necessary to the early completion and publication of the authorized volumes should be given in time to secure against delays, which increase the cost and at the same time diminish the value of the work.

The report of the Secretary exhibits, with interesting fullness, the condition of the Territories. They have shared with the States the great increase in farm products and are bringing yearly large areas into cultivation by extending their irrigating canals. This work is being done by individuals or local corporations and without that system which a full preliminary survey of the water supply and of the irrigable lands would enable them to adopt. The future of the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, and Utah in their material growth and in the increase, independence, and happiness of their people is very largely dependent upon wise and timely legislation, either by Congress or their own legislatures, regulating the distribution of the water supply furnished by their streams. If this matter is much longer neglected, private corporations will have unrestricted control of one of the elements of life and the patentees of the arid lands will be tenants at will of the water companies.

The United States should part with its ownership of the water sources and the sites for reservoirs, whether to the States and Territories or to individuals or corporations, only upon conditions that will insure to the settlers their proper water supply upon equal and reasonable terms. In the Territories this whole subject is under the full control of Congress, and in the States it is practically so as long as the Government holds the title to the reservoir sites and water sources and can grant them upon such conditions as it chooses to impose. The improvident granting of franchises of enormous value, without recompense to the State or municipality from which they proceed and without proper protection of the public interests, is the most noticeable and flagrant evil of modern legislation. This fault should not be committed in dealing with a subject that will, before many years, affect so vitally thousands of our people.

The legislation of Congress for the repression of polygamy has, after years of resistance on the part of the Mormons, at last brought them to the conclusion that resistance is unprofitable and unavailing. The power of Congress over this subject should not be surrendered until we have satisfactory evidence that the people of the State to be created would exercise the exclusive power of the State over this subject in the same way. The question is not whether these people now obey the laws of Congress against polygamy, but rather, would they make, enforce, and maintain such laws themselves if absolutely free to regulate the subject? We can not afford to experiment with this subject, for when a State is once constituted the act is final and any mistake irretrievable. No compact in the enabling act could, in my opinion, be binding or effective.

I recommend that provision be made for the organization of a simple form of town government in Alaska, with power to regulate such matters as are usually in the States under municipal control. These local civil organizations will give better protection in some matters than the present skeleton Territorial organization. Proper restrictions as to the power to levy taxes and to create debt should be imposed.

If the establishment of the Department of Agriculture was regarded by anyone as a mere concession to the unenlightened demand of a worthy class of people, that impression has been most effectually removed by the great results already attained. Its home influence has been very great in disseminating agricultural and horticultural information, in stimulating and directing a further diversification of crops, in detecting and eradicating diseases of domestic animals, and, more than all, in the close and informal contact which it has established and maintains with the farmers and stock-raisers of the whole country. Every request for information has had prompt attention and every suggestion merited consideration. The scientific corps of the Department is of a high order and is pushing its investigations with method and enthusiasm.

The inspection by this Department of cattle and pork products intended for shipment abroad has been the basis of the success which has attended our efforts to secure the removal of the restrictions maintained by the European governments.

For ten years protests and petitions upon this subject from the packers and stock-raisers of the United States have been directed against these restrictions, which so seriously limited our markets and curtailed the profits of the farm. It is a source of general congratulation that success has at last been attained, for the effects of an enlarged foreign market for these meats will be felt not only by the farmer but in our public finances and in every branch of trade. It is particularly fortunate that the increased demand for food products resulting from the removal of the restrictions upon our meats and from the reciprocal trade arrangements to which I have referred should have come at a time when the agricultural surplus is so large. Without the help thus derived lower prices would have prevailed. The Secretary of Agriculture estimates that the restrictions upon the importation of our pork products into Europe lost us a market for $20,000,000 worth of these products annually.

The grain crop of this year was the largest in our history, 50 per cent greater than that of last year, and yet the new markets that have been opened and the larger demand resulting from short crops in Europe have sustained prices to such an extent that the enormous surplus of meats and breadstuffs will be marketed at good prices, bringing relief and prosperity to an industry that was much depressed. The value of the grain crop of the United States is estimated by the Secretary to be this year five hundred million dollars more than last; of meats, one hundred and fifty millions more, and of all products of the farm, seven hundred millions more. It is not inappropriate, I think, here to suggest that our satisfaction in the contemplation of this marvelous addition to the national wealth is unclouded by any suspicion of the currency by which it is measured and in which the farmer is paid for the product of his fields.

The report of the Civil Service Commission should receive the careful attention of the opponents as well as the friends of this reform. The Commission invites a personal inspection by Senators and Representatives of its records and methods; and every fair critic will feel that such an examination should precede a judgment of condemnation either of the system or its administration. It is not claimed that either is perfect, but I believe that the law is being executed with impartiality, and that the system is incomparably better and fairer than that of appointments upon favor. I have during the year extended the classified service to include superintendents, teachers, matrons, and physicians in the Indian service. This branch of the service is largely related to educational and philanthropic work and will obviously be the better for the change.

The heads of the several Executive Departments have been directed to establish at once an efficiency record as the basis of a comparative rating of the clerks within the classified service, with a view to placing promotions therein upon the basis of merit. I am confident that such a record, fairly kept and open to the inspection of those interested, will powerfully stimulate the work of the Departments and will be accepted by all as placing the troublesome matter of promotions upon a just basis.

I recommend that the appropriations for the Civil Service Commission be made adequate to the increased work of the next fiscal year.

I have twice before urgently called the attention of Congress to the necessity of legislation for the protection of the lives of railroad employés, but nothing has yet been done. During the year ending June 30, 1890, 369 brakemen were killed and 7,841 maimed while engaged in coupling cars. The total number of railroad employés killed during the year was 2,451, and the number injured, 22,390. This is a cruel and largely needless sacrifice. The Government is spending nearly one million dollars annually to save the lives of shipwrecked seamen; every steam vessel is rigidly inspected and required to adopt the most approved safety appliances. All this is good; but how shall we excuse the lack of interest and effort in behalf of this army of brave young men who in our land commerce are being sacrificed every year by the continued use of antiquated and dangerous appliances? A law requiring of every railroad engaged in interstate commerce the equipment each year of a given per cent of its freight cars with automatic couplers and air brakes would compel an agreement between the roads as to the kind of brakes and couplers to be used and would very soon and very greatly reduce the present fearful death rate among railroad employés.

The method of appointment by the States of electors of President and Vice-President has recently attracted renewed interest by reason of a departure by the State of Michigan from the method which had become uniform in all the States. Prior to 1832 various methods had been used by the different States and even by the same State. In some the choice was made by the Legislature; in others electors were chosen by districts, but more generally by the voters of the whole State upon a general ticket. The movement towards the adoption of the last-named method had an early beginning and went steadily forward among the States, until in 1832 there remained but a single State, South Carolina, that had not adopted it. That State, until the civil war, continued to choose its electors by a vote of the Legislature, but after the war changed its method and conformed to the practice of the other States. For nearly sixty years all the States save one have appointed their electors by a popular vote upon a general ticket, and for nearly thirty years this method was universal.

After a full test of other methods, without important division or dissent in any State and without any purpose of party advantage, as we must believe, but solely upon the considerations that uniformity was desirable and that a general election in territorial divisions not subject to change was most consistent with the popular character of our institutions, best preserved the equality of the voters, and perfectly removed the choice of President from the baneful influence of the "gerrymander," the practice of all the States was brought into harmony. That this concurrence should now be broken is, I think, an unfortunate and even a threatening episode, and one that may well suggest whether the States that still give their approval to the old and prevailing method ought not to secure, by a constitutional amendment, a practice which has had the approval of all. The recent Michigan legislation provides for choosing what are popularly known as the Congressional electors for President by Congressional districts, and the two Senatorial electors by districts created for that purpose. This legislation, was of course, accompanied by a new Congressional apportionment, and the two statutes bring the electoral vote of the State under the influence of the "gerrymander."

These gerrymanders for Congressional purposes are in most cases buttressed by a gerrymander of the legislative districts, thus making it impossible for a majority of the legal voters of the State to correct the apportionment and equalize the Congressional districts. A minority rule is established that only a political convulsion can overthrow. I have recently been advised that in one county of a certain State three districts for the election of members of the Legislature are constituted as follows: One has 65,000 population; one, 15,000, and one, 10,000; while in another county, detached, noncontiguous sections have been united to make a legislative district. These methods have already found effective application to the choice of Senators and Representatives in Congress, and now an evil start has been made in the direction of applying them to the choice by the States of electors of President and Vice-President. If this is accomplished, we shall then have the three great departments of the Government in the grasp of the "gerrymander," the legislative and executive directly and the judiciary indirectly through the power of appointment.

An election implies a body of electors having prescribed qualifications, each one of whom has an equal value and influence in determining the result. So when the Constitution provides that "each State shall appoint" (elect), "in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors," etc., an unrestricted power was not given to the Legislatures in the selection of the methods to be used. "A republican form of government" is guarantied by the Constitution to each State, and the power given by the same instrument to the Legislatures of the States to prescribe methods for the choice by the State of electors must be exercised under that limitation. The essential features of such a government are the right of the people to choose their own officers and the nearest practicable equality of value in the suffrages given in determining that choice.

It will not be claimed that the power given to the Legislature would support a law providing that the persons receiving the smallest vote should be the electors or a law that all the electors should be chosen by the voters of a single Congressional district. The State is to choose, and, under the pretense of regulating methods, the Legislature can neither vest the right of choice elsewhere nor adopt methods not conformable to republican institutions. It is not my purpose here to discuss the question whether a choice by the Legislature or by the voters of equal single districts is a choice by the State, but only to recommend such regulation of this matter by constitutional amendment as will secure uniformity and prevent that disgraceful partisan jugglery to which such a liberty of choice, if it exists, offers a temptation.

Nothing just now is more important than to provide every guaranty for the absolutely fair and free choice by an equal suffrage, within the respective States, of all the officers of the National Government, whether that suffrage is applied directly, as in the choice of members of the House of Representatives, or indirectly, as in the choice of Senators and electors of President. Respect for public officers and obedience to law will not cease to be the characteristics of our people until our elections cease to declare the will of majorities fairly ascertained, without fraud, suppression, or gerrymander. If I were called upon to declare wherein our chief national danger lies, I should say, without hesitation, in the overthrow of majority control by the suppression or perversion of the popular suffrage. That there is a real danger here all must agree, but the energies of those who see it have been chiefly expended in trying to fix responsibility upon the opposite party, rather than in efforts to make such practices impossible by either party.

Is it not possible now to adjourn that interminable and inconclusive debate while we take, by consent, one step in the direction of reform by eliminating the gerrymander, which has been denounced by all parties, as an influence in the selection of electors of President and members of Congress? All the States have, acting freely and separately, determined that the choice of electors by a general ticket is the wisest and safest method, and it would seem there could be no objection to a constitutional amendment making that method permanent. If a legislature chosen in one year upon purely local questions should, pending a Presidential contest, meet, rescind the law for a choice upon a general ticket, and provide for the choice of electors by the Legislature, and this trick should determine the result, it is not too much to say that the public peace might be seriously and widely endangered.

I have alluded to the "gerrymander" as affecting the method of selecting electors of President by Congressional districts, but the primary intent and effect of this form of political robbery have relation to the selection of members of the House of Representatives. The power of Congress is ample to deal with this threatening and intolerable abuse. The unfailing test of sincerity in election reform will be found in a willingness to confer as to remedies and to put into force such measures as will most effectually preserve the right of the people to free and equal representation.

An attempt was made in the last Congress to bring to bear the constitutional powers of the General Government for the correction of frauds against the suffrage. It is important to know whether the opposition to such measures is really rested in particular features supposed to be objectionable or includes any proposition to give to the election laws of the United States adequacy to the correction of grave and acknowledged evils. I must yet entertain the hope that it is possible to secure a calm, patriotic consideration of such constitutional or statutory changes as may be necessary to secure the choice of the officers of the Government to the people by fair apportionments and free elections.

I believe it would be possible to constitute a commission, nonpartisan in its membership and composed of patriotic, wise, and impartial men, to whom a consideration of the question of the evils connected with our election system and methods might be committed with a good prospect of securing unanimity in some plan for removing or mitigating those evils. The Constitution would permit the selection of the commission to be vested in the Supreme Court, if that method would give the best guaranty of impartiality.

This commission should be charged with the duty of inquiring into the whole subject of the law of elections as related to the choice of officers of the National Government, with a view to securing to every elector a free and unmolested exercise of the suffrage and as near an approach to an equality of value in each ballot cast as is attainable.

While the policies of the General Government upon the tariff, upon the restoration of our merchant marine, upon river and harbor improvements, and other such matters of grave and general concern are liable to be turned this way or that by the results of Congressional elections, and administrative policies, sometimes involving issues that tend to peace or war, to be turned this way or that by the results of a Presidential election, there is a rightful interest in all the States and in every Congressional district that will not be deceived or silenced by the audacious pretense that the question of the right of any body of legal voters in any State or in any Congressional district to give their suffrages freely upon these general questions is a matter only of local concern or control. The demand that the limitations of suffrage shall be found in the law, and only there, is a just demand, and no just man should resent or resist it. My appeal is, and must continue to be, for a consultation that shall "proceed with candor, calmness, and patience upon the lines of justice and humanity, not of prejudice and cruelty."

To the consideration of these very grave questions I invite not only the attention of Congress, but that of all patriotic citizens. We must not entertain the delusion that our people have ceased to regard a free ballot and equal representation as the price of their allegiance to laws and to civil magistrates.

I have been greatly rejoiced to notice many evidences of the increased unification of our people and of a revived national spirit. The vista that now opens to us is wider and more glorious than ever before. Gratification and amazement struggle for supremacy as we contemplate the population, wealth, and moral strength of our country. A trust momentous in its influence upon our people and upon the world is for a brief time committed to us, and we must not be faithless to its first condition—the defense of the free and equal influence of the people in the choice of public officers and in the control of public affairs.

BENJ. HARRISON.

HON. WILLARD WARNER.

Mr. SHERMAN. I offer a resolution for reference to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Hon. Willard Warner, late a Senator from Alabama, the amount due him from the beginning of his term, on the 4th of March, 1867, until he was paid; said payment to be made from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. I suggest to the Senator from Ohio that he modify the resolution so that it will not, if it passes, trench upon the general fund of the Sergeant-at-Arms which the Secretary has for current expenses. Such claims have always been paid from specific appropriations.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the form of the resolution need not be changed. I understand that a specific appropriation is required. If the resolution shall meet with the approval of the committee and shall be passed by the Senate, then, as a matter of course, it will be the duty of the Committee on Appropriations to recommend the appropriation specifically.

Mr. HALE. The resolution had better read, "to be paid from a specific appropriation."

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. HALE. After the words "said payment to be made from," I suggest that the words "a special appropriation for" be inserted. Then, if the resolution shall be passed by the Senate, the Committee on Appropriations will recommend an appropriation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be amended as suggested, if there be no objection; and as amended it will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

EXPENSES OF MONEY-LENDING.

Mr. PEFFER. I submit a resolution, and ask that it be read and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolution asking an investigation of the expenses attending the business of money-lending.

Whereas complaint is made that money, when loaned at legal and customary rates of interest, yields larger profit than is realized in industrial pursuits, the law thus affording to money a protection not accorded to any other kind of property; and

Whereas it is alleged that present methods of getting money in circulation through banks and loan agencies is unnecessarily expensive: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to inquire and report as soon as practicable what is the actual expense attending the business of money-lending as it is conducted in the United States by bankers and other persons who lend on short periods of time only—less than one year—and by loan agents, trust companies, and other institutions that lend on long periods—one year and more—including such as negotiate loans for others; also to inquire as to the amount of business done by the persons, companies, or corporations examined, and the proportion which the aggregate expense bears to the amount of money loaned.

In considering expenses the committee will include rent or use of buildings, insurance, taxes, fuel, light, stationery, postage, telegraphing, clerk hire, salaries of officers, and every other item which goes to make up the expense account, the object being to ascertain, approximately, the actual and relative cost of conducting the business of lending money, without reference to the value of the money lent.

The committee is authorized to send for persons and papers and examine witnesses under oath touching any matter involved in the inquiry, and may, by a subcommittee, visit any part of the country to take testimony, to the end that the work may be done efficiently and without unnecessary delay or expense.

The necessary expenses of this inquiry will be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the rule the resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. PLATT. I understood that the Senator introducing the resolution asked its reference to the Committee on Finance in the first instance.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it ought to be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What is the pleasure of the Senator who offered the resolution?

Mr. PEFFER. I suppose that under the rule the resolution will lie over one day if objection is made. I suggested that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so referred if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

He also introduced a bill (S. 893) providing for the adoption and use of a uniform standard automatic car coupler and regulating the operation and control of freight trains used in interstate commerce, and providing for the greater safety of railroad employés, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senate will pardon me a single word, I will state that this subject has been before the Interstate Commerce Committee for not less than two or three sessions. We have taken a good deal of testimony, but have been unable so far to come to a conclusion as to the kind of bill that ought to be passed, realizing all the time that some law on the subject should be enacted. The subject is a very important one. We are reminded every year of the large number of persons who have suffered either death or injury in the conduct of the business of railroading, and have appreciated the gravity of the situation, but we have not yet determined the kind of legislation that it is wise to adopt on the part of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. PLATT (to Mr. CULLOM). And you do not want to have any legislation to make the matter worse than it is now.

Mr. CULLOM. As the Senator from Connecticut says, we have feared that we might recommend legislation that would make the case worse than it is. That has been a reason for our hesitation in making a report from that committee.

The bill which I have just introduced provides a means by which we will be enabled to find out, if possible, what is the best device for security to the lives and limbs of those engaged in the conduct of railroading, as switchmen, engineers, brakemen, etc. I hope that during the present session, and perhaps early, the Committee on Interstate Commerce may be able to report a bill which will be satisfactory to the men engaged in the railroad business.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to say, Mr. President, that I believe the first railroad commission organized in this country was the railroad commission of Massachusetts. It has been a public organization of the very greatest value in our State, having introduced many very important improvements in railroad management both for the convenience of the public and the safety of passengers; and it is an office which has been held in that State by some of our very wisest and ablest men who have devoted themselves to this class of subjects.

That commission has within the last two or three years had its attention specially called to the great loss of life and injury to limb and health sustained by the men who are employed in handling freight and freight cars on our railroads, and they are, as everybody knows, a very numerous, a very intelligent, and a very important body of the skilled laborers of the country.

The railroad commissioners of Massachusetts would long ago have provided a security for the freight men certainly as great as that which has been provided in the case of passengers by the railroads of the country if they had not been met by the fact that the jurisdiction over railroads engaged in interstate commerce is a national and not a State jurisdiction. In encountering that obstacle they presented to my honorable friend, the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, during the last Congress a very earnest petition for legislation on this subject, which was reënforced and urged by a personal visit of the distinguished chairman of that railroad commission to Washington with a view of pressing the subject upon the attention of Congress. But, for the reasons which have been so well stated by the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, the necessity of great care not to make the matter worse instead of better, the time required for maturing the necessary legislation, and I suppose I may properly add, the great anxiety on the part of all of us, especially on the part of that experienced committee, not to be influenced in any way by persons who are seeking to sell their own inventions, it was found impracticable to perfect legislation in the last Congress. But I desire to add my earnest hope and my confident belief that the committee will deal with the subject at the earliest practicable day, and that this Congress will not pass by without the passage of a measure of safety and security for this most important portion of our fellow citizens.

Mr. CULLOM. I only want to add one word, Mr. President, and that is that this bill provides a scheme by which the Government will be able to find out what in the judgment of a great majority of those engaged in railroading is regarded as the safest and most complete device to secure the people engaged in this service from injury or loss of life.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

D. 1871; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. QUAY. I ask the reference of that bill to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FRYE. I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania why a bill which is to pay certain damages to the State of Pennsylvania for injuries inflicted during the war should be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. QUAY. A similar bill took that course at the last Congress, and that was one reason for asking the same reference now.

Mr. FRYE. I think those claims heretofore have always gone to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. QUAY. I have no objection to a reference to that committee. A similar bill, as I have stated, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs at the last Congress.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What disposition shall be made of the bill?

Mr. FRYE. It seems to me that it ought to go to the Committee on Claims. They have jurisdiction of those matters.

Mr. QUAY. I have no objection to that reference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Claims in the absence of objection.

I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH introduced a bill (S. 1076) to license and regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors in the district of Alaska; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. DOLPH. I desire to say a word or two in regard to the bill. The measure will be criticised. All the laws upon this subject which have applied to Alaska heretofore have been entirely prohibitory. I was there six years ago last summer and again last July, and in every little town in the district, every other place was a saloon where liquors were exposed for sale. There are to-day three breweries in the district, carrying on the business of making and selling beer. There are in the little town of Juneau twenty-two saloons in which liquors can be procured at any time. There are nearly as many in the town of Sitka, and a like number may be found in proportion to the population in other towns.

The attempt to prohibit the importation into or the manufacture and sale in Alaska of intoxicating liquors has been a complete failure. The district is 2,200 miles east and west, and 1,500 miles north and south, and has, it is estimated, if you include the indentures in the coast, 25,000 miles of coast line. It lies adjoining to British Columbia, and the vilest liquors are constantly smuggled into the territory and sold to the Indians and to minors. An attempt was made recently by the Federal officers there to establish a sort of license system, supposing that they could secure enough public sentiment back of them by licensing a few respectable places to enforce the law so far as to prevent the sale of intoxicating liquors to the Indians and to minors. It was a failure, and, of course rightfully, the collector of customs was removed for his participation in the scheme, although he came into it last. Although the move was in the right direction, it was a mistake, as they had no legislative power. But I think it would be a very wise thing to provide for licensing respectable places, requiring them to give ample bond that they would not sell intoxicating liquors to Indians and minors, and thus create a public sentiment in the district which would sustain the officers of the Government in endeavoring to enforce the law. It is the only way it can be done, and while I would favor entire prohibition if it could be enforced at all or be of any benefit, I am constrained to favor something practical, and I take the initiatory by introducing the bill.

I move that the bill, with the accompanying papers which I submit in regard to licensing the sale of liquor in Alaska, be referred to the Committee on Territories.

The motion was agreed to.

DEATH OF HON. LEONIDAS C. HOUK.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I rise to perform the mournful duty of announcing to the House the death of my friend and late colleague, the Hon. Leonidas C. Houk. He died suddenly of accidental poisoning at his home in the city of Knoxville on the 25th day of May, of the present year.

Thousands of his countrymen followed his remains in sorrow to their last resting place, and thousands more wept as they would weep at the grave of nearest kindred when they realized that their faithful friend and trusted Representative had passed away.

From 1861 to 1863 he was a Union soldier, being colonel of the Third Tennessee Infantry; from 1866 to 1870 he was judge of his judicial circuit; from 1873 to 1875 he was a State legislator. He entered the Forty-sixth Congress, and was elected consecutively to the Forty-seventh, Forty-eighth, Forty-ninth, Fiftieth, Fifty-first, and Fifty-second Congresses. He had a hold upon his people far beyond that of any man or combination of men, and had he lived, he could have been returned to Congress as long as he might have desired to remain in the public service. He died poor in this world's goods but rich in the friendship and love of his countrymen.

I shall say no more of him now, for I am aware that some day in the future will be fixed by the House when his associates and friends will be accorded an opportunity to place on record their estimate of his life and character, of his public services, and to take such action as they may deem best fitting as a last tribute of respect to his memory.

I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolutions which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. Leonidas C. Houk, late a Representative from the State of Tennessee.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to his memory the House do now adjourn.

SWEARING IN A MEMBER.

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Speaker, before the question on the resolutions is submitted to the House, I desire to state that the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. Bartine] is present, and wishes to be sworn in.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suspend the question on the resolutions until the gentleman from Nevada can be sworn in.

Mr. Bartine then came forward and took the oath prescribed by law.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution to fill a vacancy on the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

DEATH OF HON. L. C. HOUK.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to the resolutions offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR].

The resolutions were agreed to unanimously.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 14 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Saturday.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, December 17, 1891.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Vice-President being absent, the President pro tempore (Hon. CHARLES F. MANDERSON) took the chair.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CULLOM. Preparatory to submitting resolutions for the arrangement of the committees of the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that that part of Rule XXIV which requires the appointment of standing and other committees of the Senate to be made by ballot be suspended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois asks the unanimous consent of the Senate that so much of Rule XXIV as provides for the election of committees by ballot be dispensed with. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CULLOM. I submit a resolution, which I ask may be read.

Mr. COCKRELL. Before the resolution is read I desire to state that in consequence of the absence of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Vance], who has not yet been sworn in, the places which are intended for him and which will be assigned to him as soon as he takes his seat have been assigned to his colleague [Mr. RANSOM], and when the Senator from North Carolina returns his colleague will resign from those committees. It is the understanding that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Vance] is to take the exact places, at the head of a committee and so on, that his colleague will now hold for him. Also the places which will be assigned to the Senator from New York [Mr. Hill] when he takes his seat are to be filled by other Senators who will resign, and we shall then ask that he be appointed to fill the vacancies thus created. This will explain why it is that so many places are assigned to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM], and why other Senators have more appointments on committees than they otherwise would have.

Mr. CULLOM. That information was imparted to me, and I see no reason myself why the arrangement suggested should not be carried out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Illinois will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as follows:

Joint resolution for the election of United States Senators by the vote of the people.

Whereas the causes no longer exist which influenced "the fathers" at the time the Constitution of the United States was framed to provide that the Senators in Congress should be elected by the Legislatures of the several States; and

Whereas the experience of recent years has demonstrated the necessity of a change in the manner of electing Senators if that body is to continue to represent the conservative public sentiment; and

Whereas it is more in accord with the spirit of our institutions, and has been proved to be, all things considered, the best mode of selecting public servants, to elect them by a vote of the people: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That it is the sense of this Legislature that the Constitution of the United States should be amended so as to provide that Senators in Congress shall be elected by a vote of the people.

Resolved further, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be advised accordingly.

ten additional messengers, at the rate of $720 per annum each; one attendant in ladies' retiring room, Senate wing of the Capitol, at the rate of $720 per annum; said employés to be paid from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. PLATT. I wish the resolution to go over.

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask the Senator to allow me to make a statement concerning the resolution.

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. PADDOCK. This resolution was reported by the Committee on Rules, and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. It is made necessary because of the acquisition of the building known as the Maltby House for the use of committees. There are seven or eight committees already in that building, and more are to go there. The Maltby House was acquired by purchase at the last session of Congress because of the necessity of securing additional committee rooms, there not being sufficient rooms within the Capitol proper to supply the committees organized, recognized, and required by the Senate to do its business. Therefore the Committee on Contingent Expenses, in view of the fact that this necessity seemed to exist, because there was no force whatever to perform the duties required to be performed in connection with the occupancy of that building, because the Committee on Rules, after very careful and thorough investigation, found it to be necessary to report in favor of such an increase, and because, further, the Committee on Contingent Expenses, after diligent inquiry, became satisfied that the situation demanded their indorsement of the action of that committee, and accordingly adopted the report which I have submitted.

Mr. PLATT. I do not know that I shall make any objection to the resolution when it comes to be acted upon, but it proposes to provide for a somewhat large increase to the already numerous force which waits upon the Senate and Senators, and I should like to have an opportunity to look it over. I ask, therefore, that the resolution may lie over for the present.

Mr. PADDOCK. That is all right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Being objected to, the resolution will lie over under the rules.

REPORT ON CATTLE AND DAIRY FARMING.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be reprinted —— copies of House Executive Document No. 51 of the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress, on "Cattle and Dairy Farming," of which number —— copies shall be for the use of the Senate, —— copies for the use of the House, and —— copies for distribution by the Department of State.

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be, and is hereby, instructed to inquire into the advisability of appropriate action looking to the invitation of the governments of the world to a conference to be held in connection with the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago, for the purpose of discussing and recommending measures by which the principles of arbitration may be incorporated in treaties, conflicting international laws harmonized, and an international court established having jurisdiction in cases which governments shall fail to settle by negotiation, and to report by bill or otherwise.

REPORT ON DISEASES OF THE HORSE.

Mr. VOORHEES. I offer a resolution, and I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be, and are hereby, instructed to inquire into the expediency and propriety of publishing for public distribution 250,000 additional copies of the report of the Agricultural Department on diseases of the horse, and to report to the Senate on the subject by bill or otherwise.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I may be pardoned for saying that that book is in greater demand, in my judgment, than any other ever published by this Government, and it may well be. It is one of exceeding importance; and while I am in favor of this Congress especially being economical (and all others, for that matter), money spent in that direction will be well spent and gratefully received by the most important class of our citizens.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is under the impression that according to the rule the resolution must go to the Committee on Printing for its report as to the cost.

Mr. VOORHEES. The resolution is an instruction to the committee, and I presume that the Senate will have to adopt the resolution before the committee can be instructed thereby.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the resolution be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again read.

The Chief Clerk again read the resolution.

Mr. HARRIS. I have no objection to the present consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana asks for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope there will be no objection, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears none. The resolution is before the Senate, and the question is on agreeing to the same.

The resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON THE UNIVERSITY OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. CULLOM submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Select Committee to Establish the University of the United States be, and it hereby is, authorized to employ a clerk during the sessions of the Senate, said clerk to be paid the usual per diem salary from the contingent fund of the Senate.

PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. HARRIS. I understand that the other House has adjourned until Saturday, when it is understood, at least I have been informed the probabilities are, that a resolution will be sent to the Senate in respect to adjourning for the holidays. Would it not be well to adjourn over until Saturday instead of Monday, so that we may see what action the other House may take on that subject?

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to changing my motion so as to adjourn until Saturday instead of Monday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio modifies his motion, and moves that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Saturday next.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask for an indefinite leave of absence from the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi asks indefinite leave of absence from the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and leave is granted.

ELECTION OF UNITED STATES SENATORS BY THE PEOPLE.

Mr. TURPIE. Mr. President——

Mr. STEWART. In view of the probability that we may not have a session on next Monday, I will beg leave of the Senate to make my remarks on silver immediately at the conclusion of the speech of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

Mr. TURPIE. According to the notice of last week, I move to take from the table the joint resolution (S. R. No. 6) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for the election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people of the several States, and I move its reference to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I ask that the joint resolution may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States, which, when ratified by three-fourths of said Legislatures, shall become and be a part of the Constitution, namely:

That section 3 of Article I be so amended that the same shall be as follows:

"ARTICLE I.

"SEC. 3. That the Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, who shall be chosen by a direct vote of the people of the several States, for six years; and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislatures; and each Senator shall have one vote."

Mr. TURPIE. Mr. President, during the late regular session thereof, in 1890, the General Assembly of the State of Indiana passed the following resolution:

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That our Senators be instructed, and our members in Congress be requested, to use their influence to secure the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to provide for the election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people, and that a copy of this resolution be sent to each of our Senators and members of Congress.

This action was taken, as is shown by the journals, in a Legislature composed of representatives of every party, and their official expression of opinion may be accounted as deliberate, decisive, and substantially unanimous. It is written that forms of government long established should not be changed for light or transient causes. The mode of choosing United States Senators is a part of the form of government created by the Constitution of 1789, in force now for more than a century.

Indiana was admitted into the Union in 1816, during the Presidency of Madison. Her history as a State began under the auspices of that line of chief magistrates sprung from the patriots of the Revolution, and continued under the same until the close of the term of Monroe, in 1825. Indiana is not a new State; the sixth in the order of admission, she stands now senior to much the larger number. She is not one of the oldest, one of the original thirteen whose people adopted the Constitution. Her allegiance thereto, due by the terms of a later accession, has been avouched in many an act of valor, of devotion, by her sons in behalf of constitutional government. Her loyalty and attachment to the institutions of our country is of the most perfect tone and character. It is hereditary, traditional, a sentiment of steady, constant, permanent growth and development.

The men who first settled within our borders, who first subdued these fertile valleys and prairies to the tilth of the plow, were for the most part emigrants from the original thirteen States, who brought with them their love and fealty to the Constitution of their fathers, and as a portion of the choicest heritage bequeathed the same to their descendants. These pioneers in the settlement and improvement of the State, and those who followed them for many years, came in very nearly equal proportion from the northern and southern sections of the Union, from Pennsylvania, New York, and New England, from Maryland, Delaware, Virginia, Kentucky, and the two Carolinas.

I doubt if there be any State or region of country within the Republic which has in this respect been so evenly colonized. No large city has overshadowed, no flood of migration has since disturbed these particular features of our population; its original character remains unchanged.

Central in geographical position, seated in the heart of the continent, inclosing within her limits the center of population of the whole country, inhabited by a people derived from all parts of the ancient colonial domain, the political action of Indiana has been eminently conservative.

Opinion in the State has become fixed, balanced, well poised, neither easily nor much moved even upon the keenest and most prolonged agitation. Issues the most exciting and important have been year after year determined by a very small preponderance of votes in a total of half a million of suffrages.

When, therefore, the Legislature of a State thus founded, formed, and maintained instructs its representatives here in favor of a change in the organic law of the nation we may ask for it with strict propriety a candid consideration.

The question by whom Senators should be chosen does not seem to have been much considered by the framers of the Constitution or by the constituencies to whom it was submitted for adoption.

That they should be chosen by the Legislatures of the several States was determined almost of course; there was a great deal in the history of that time which led even unconsciously to such a conclusion.

The Legislatures of the thirteen colonies, chosen by the people, thoroughly in accord with popular opinion and judgment, had been the chief instrumentalities in defying and defeating the unwarrantable usurpations of the British crown and in preparing armed resistance to its tyranny.

After the Declaration of Independence and during the war which followed it the Legislatures elected the governor and other chief officers, both civil and military, in the several States. The same legislative bodies selected and commissioned the members of the Continental Congress. At a later day, under the Articles of Confederation of 1778, although it had been therein provided that delegates to Congress should be annually appointed in such manner as the Legislatures of the States might direct, members of Congress still continued to be chosen by the Legislature.

Thus we read that Mr. Jefferson was, as late as 1783, on the 6th day of June of that year, appointed a Delegate to Congress by the Legislature of the State of Virginia, to take effect from the 1st of November next following. All the members of the convention which framed the Federal Constitution were chosen in the same way by the Legislative Assemblies of the different States. Their credentials may still be read at large in the pages of Elliott; they resemble those of a modern Senator.

Indeed, the State Legislatures during the war for independence and for some time afterwards were the favored and trusted depositories of a variety of delegated powers. It is not strange, therefore, that the part given them in the election of members of this body should have attracted little notice, elicited no dissent.

It has been gravely written of the members of the Constitutional Convention of 1787 that they had before them a carte blanche upon which to inscribe a scheme of government at discretion. As if their coming together were a sort of social reunion after the toils of war—a congratulatory ceremonial upon the victory achieved; and their labors as lawgivers are to be regarded as in the nature of political pastime. Than these views nothing can be more erroneous.

The statesmen of the Revolution were personages of the most serious gravity of character and demeanor. We may observe this in their faces, painted or sculptured, within the walls of this Capitol. These venerable countenances seem to be almost of one family, as they were of one phase and era—deeply marked, furrowed with the cares and perils of life earnestly embattled, they have "looks commercing with the skies," the troubled skies of a stormy period.

These patriarchs of our dispensation had undergone every vicissitude of fortune, neither unduly elated by success nor depressed by disaster. They were men of high thoughts seated in hearts of courtesy, intensely devoted to their country and its cause, exceedingly proud of that cause wherein they had loved much, hoped all things, asked nothing. The membership of the body comprised sound learning—indeed, accurate and exact scholarship in the line of political study and research. There were among them those familiar with the laws, usages, and institutions of the Roman Republic in its purest and best days, before the Cæsars, who knew the various functions of the senate, of the consuls and tribunes, of the tribes and the comitia. They had read in the original tongue and had pondered over the constitutions of Attica and the early Hellenic commonwealths. They had often repaired to the Athenian orators—

> Those ancient, whose resistless eloquence
> Wielded at will that fierce democracy,
> Shook the arsenal, and fulmined over Greece
> To Macedon and Artaxerxes' throne.

Not called upon the roll when this convention met, a great company sat down with them: from Thermopylæ and Marathon; from Bannockburn and Runnymede; from the liberated cantons of the Swiss, the homes of Tell and Winkelried; from every age and clime where dauntless heroism had uttered the cry, "Make way for liberty"—these were of that assembly. They must have borne also in lively remembrance the more recent but very high and liberal standards of civil and political rights which had been established in the government of the various States after the overthrow of the royal supremacy.

They did have in their midst some sort of helps, examples, models, precedents, but also very grievous hindrances and incumbrances, very anxious forebodings as to the result of their labors.

No task was ever undertaken by a legislative body under conditions more difficult, limitations more precise, or powers so wholly devoid of compulsion. Its members were embarrassed by the local jealousies of each State, by the conflicting interests of their particular sections, and by the prejudices of the provincial assemblies whose immediate agents they had become, and whose functions their work was in many things to supersede.

Gen. Washington relates that when he arrived in Philadelphia to attend the convention the first thing he did was to call upon Franklin, who had also been elected a member thereof, and whom he styles the president—the president of the State of Pennsylvania—a title then given by some of the Commonwealths to their chief executives. Indeed, during the period of the Continental Congress and the Articles of Confederation the States had exercised and had been long accustomed to the use of powers and prerogatives almost national—of almost independent sovereignty.

The question how much of these was to be retained, how much to be surrendered, disclosed a right perilous line and edge of partition for adjustment. The complete freedom and independence of the constituencies made fetters for their representatives.

With all its distinguished virtues and capacity the convention yet needed one qualification, one which they had in largest measure—statesmanship—that excellence of statesmanship to which few men are born, which not many achieve, and which none have thrust upon them; in so much that eminent publicists of modern times, not of this country, have declared this Constitution to be the most perfect scheme of civil government ever devised by human wisdom. It follows that an assembly of this character dealt with great questions in a great way.

The sections of most urgency, propositions about which the sharpest differences developed, they determined not without the fullest debate, not until after the most careful scrutiny and freest conference. Matters of less importance, or those at the time deemed such, received less attention.

It does not seem that there was any debate or division upon the topic as to who should choose United States Senators. The alternative of a choice by the people or the Legislature of the States appears not even to have been presented. They did not omit to provide for the contingency that a matter then regarded as of minor moment might become, as this has in our age, of great concern. So such things were left by their provident wisdom to the disposal of future advisement and after amendment.

This is called a government of the people, republican in form, and very justly may it be so called in comparison with many others, especially those in vogue at the time of its establishment. Such a government ought to be one wherein the people should control and more immediately direct the management of public affairs. We are constantly repeating the maxim that the people are the real source of all authority, yet in the actual drift of events there is a tendency to slip away from this source—to deny and to disown it.

The distribution of powers was justly regarded by the framers of our fundamental law as one of the chief safeguards of liberty, and it is within the purview of their polity and by virtue thereof that tendencies to centralism or absolutism may, by this means, be checked and thwarted. A redistribution of power; that is what this amendment proposes. It relates to a readjustment of power as at present apportioned. There is a certain element in our system which to-day is demanding a larger share of power, as is evidenced by the action of the learned and honorable Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] in introducing the resolutions of his Legislature this morning. They are demanding a larger share, and I may be permitted to say they deserve it. This decentralization is always competent by the voluntary suffrage of the people of the States, under the forms of law.

In accordance with this policy of distribution we have been provided with three departments of the Government, the legislative, executive, and judicial.

Of these three under the present form which is controlled by the people? Surely not the judiciary. This whole province of power touches but once its putative source and origin, at the time of appointment, and then only in the most indirect manner. Thereafter it is forever independent of, and, indeed, irresponsible to, the people as such.

Just as certainly it is not the executive. The head of this department is chosen by electors, who are themselves chosen by the people; but when elected, and after his induction, the President and the chiefs of the great administrative sections appointed by him are not at all the subjects of popular regulation or direction.

There remains, then, only the legislative, whereof the people have control of but one branch, the House of Representatives. It will be thus seen that in this triple distribution of powers now existing no division thereof is allotted to the people.

The amendment submitted by the General Assembly of the State of Indiana, if approved, would grant to them wholly and directly the control of the legislative department.

Ought not at least one department to be so ordered and bestowed?

It was said in the discussion, very elaborate, which attended the issue of the rejection or approval of our present Constitution that Senators in Congress were the representatives of the States, of the sovereignty of the States. No change is intended in this relation. The Senator would yet continue to be the representative in a special manner of his State. The only modification proposed is that of the electoral body which chooses the Senator. This would consist of the whole number of voters in the State, who would vote for United States Senators in the same manner as they now vote for governor and other officers.

There is nothing in the proffered amendment which could detract from the position or influence of members of this body; on the contrary, these would be enhanced. The States as such would lose nothing of dignity, sovereignty, or power. Far is it from my purpose to detract anything from the character or authority of the States.

The separate autonomies of the States, as distinct sites and centers of intellectual, social, and civic culture, and of various interests, customs, laws, and institutions, diversified as the climate and soil which characterize them, have been the chief elements in our national greatness. They have given us a very different policy and a vastly superior career to that which might have been induced by the dull and deadening uniformity of a system of centralization, destructive of local self-government, gathering to one head and focus all political functions. I do not know of a measure better calculated to preserve the separate and equal existence of the States than to give to the people of each the right directly to choose the members of both Houses of Congress.

That centripetal force indigenous to all forms of government, so alien to the spirit of a free democracy, has always been greatly favored by modes of communication such as those now existing between the Senate and the people, modes somewhat devious, indistinct, indefinite. To make the path of this communication straight, to make it a public highway, an open course, unbroken and uninterrupted from the polls to the Senate Chamber, is to inflict a grievous wound upon centralism, and will help to drive monopoly from its noxious lair. To grant to the whole body of electors in a State this Senatorial franchise, if you will allow me the use of such expression, must induce and awaken an interest much enlarged, a sense of responsibility very much heightened in the heart and mind of every citizen.

Aggrandizement of the units in a free State is not that of the Federal head, but creates and subserves the condition of distinct, independent, personal thought, feeling, and action, the unassailable bulwarks of home rule and local sovereignty. The added influence, importance, and power of each individual voter at his home must diminish the means as it would lessen the opportunity for Federal aggression.

Very keen distrust has been sometimes expressed as to the action of legislative bodies in the choice of Senators. This is only one of the forms which the popular protest against the present method most frequently assumes. Consider how full, clear, and thorough would be the remedy for the mischief of such suspicion under the new mode of election. It is true added importance would be given to that class of conferences called State conventions, and their action might be obnoxious to as grave charges as that of the Legislature. But the selection made by such conventions would not be final; it would only be primary, tentative; it would be subject to review and reversal at his leisure by every voter in the State. For that reason, no doubt, their action would be the more carefully guarded against the imputation of wrong, and yet, if found impure, might fail of acceptance.

Those studious of constitutional lore have much disputed concerning the cause of so little direct power having been placed by the terms of that instrument in the hands of the people. It has been sometimes thought that this was due to jealousy of the purely democratic element, lest it should become too dominant.

But we may well entertain the opinion that this scant allowance of direct power was chiefly due to the occasion, to the conditions of that time, especially to the fact that upon the one engrossing issue of national independence the Legislatures and the people had been by the heat of war fused, welded together, in inseparable unison.

Besides this, the Federal Government, although officially framed by the adoption of the Constitution, was still a thing of the future. Its tendencies were not wholly perceived; its effects were yet somewhat unfelt, unmeasured. But at this time, after more than a century of national existence, we begin to see indications that the General Government, in some of its dependencies and appanages, has a kind of existence, separate, distinct, very little amenable to the popular will.

The more ancient departments of the executive branch in this distribution of power have become the haunts of a long line of precedents, traditions, and usages. Although it is the theory that the administration actually and practically changes in accordance with the suffrage by successive elections, yet there are some official points and places that do not change, which appear to be unchangeable or incapable of change. We have a beginning at least of the dynasty of the bureau—bureaucracy.

The department of the judiciary, with its numerous appointees, many of them perpetual incumbents, clerks, marshals, masters, and commissioners, dealing daily with the persons and property of the citizen, yet not answerable even in the most remote manner to the people, shows a somewhat similar divergence.

Again, certain shares and subdivisions of governmental powers have been granted over, sublet to numerous corporations: that of eminent domain a right of sovereignty, that of perpetual succession an attribute of sovereignty, both often enjoyed and exercised by these corporate lessees with the very least regard to the public welfare.

Some touch of the hand of innovation, not too conservative, seems needed herein to retrace the lines, become somewhat dimmed and blurred, of a plan designed to be republican in fact as in form. The nearness of the mass of citizens to the seat of power, like the measuring eye of the master builder, would rectify these faulty lines in our political fabric. The influence of the people should become more active, operative; not so passive and advisory.

Even upon the passage of this amendment the Legislatures of the States will yet retain great functions in our Federal polity, the very greatest, far superior to those of Congress or any of the departments. It has been too common to make use of language from which it might be inferred that the power granted to the three departments of the Government were forever lost to the grantors, incapable of resumption, whereas it is very certain, both from the theory and practice of the Republic, that the people are not only the source, but the ultimate depository, of all powers, both those granted and those reserved.

The States may at any time, upon a vote sufficiently unanimous of an adequate number, three-fourths thereof, resume any part of the powers granted to the executive, judicial, or legislative divisions, or without formal resumption the people may thus directly exercise through their Legislatures the definitive functions of constitutional change and reformation. For example, if the proposed amendment in argument be submitted, the Legislatures of the several States in behalf of the people, in voting for or against it, are discharging the same duties as are ordinarily performed by Congress. If the amendment be approved they are exercising the functions of the judiciary in deciding and declaring the law, giving judgment in favor of the principle involved therein.

This is an adjudication final, not subject to review by any court, and acts from its own force. An enactment of the people through the States, in the form of a constitutional amendment, is in the nature of a decree legislative and judicial, unaffected by precedents, paramount to every other. Take the instance of the adoption of the recent amendments upon the subject of slavery. How fundamentally iconoclastic are these enactments! What a mass of ordinary statutes, State and national; what an innumerable series of judgments and decisions were overruled, repealed, and annulled thereby! Of rights vested, of rights corporate, long established, and recognized both by courts and lawgivers, relating to this subject, not a vestige remains.

Article V, relating to amendments, found near the close of this Constitution, is a testamentary devise to the people of a very large residuary estate wholly unencumbered. In this clause is placed the vital principle, the living soul of the whole dispensation. So any man must conclude who will carefully reflect upon its comprehensive forecast and explore the spacious scope and range of its intendments.

These can be interpreted only to mean that the wise founders and fathers of this system did not purpose to grant any powers absolutely to the Federal Government or to either of its departments, but ultimately to vest all powers and franchises in the people of the several States. The functions and forces of constitutional reform have hardly yet been broached. During one hundred and fifteen years we have had fifteen amendments. It may be that the time approaches for a new article with other sections upon additional subjects. If Congressional statutes and commissions are found incompetent to cope with existing evils, within the wide province of constitutional reform may yet be shown a way more excellent.

There is a restriction upon the high prerogative of the people to make in this mode the law of the land; but that restriction is not in aid of corporations: it is not in favor of corporate trusts, syndicates, or charters. That limitation is made for the benefit of the States, and it relates to the composition of this body.

Not even a constitutional amendment can deprive any State of its equal suffrage in the Senate without the consent of that State.

To correct the illegitimate tendencies in our system adverse to free institutions, to avoid the necessity of too frequent resort to extraordinary legislative action, the best method is now by this measure suggested, an increase of direct popular representation in the National Legislature.

This would cause the character of the people to be transposed more perfectly into the modes of government. This would cause the needs, wants, aims, and aspirations of the masses of men in our free communities to be more faithfully reflected, more clearly imaged forth in the laws of the country and their administration.

Congress, in the two branches thereof, would be thus brought closer to the people, and this immediate proximity would have the most wholesome effects not only upon the legislative but upon every other bureau and department of the public service.

Such a change would purify the air in the slumbrous cavern dwelt in of old by those stalagmites, the perpetual placemen of routine; it would leaven the whole lump of official autocracy; it would cut away the entail of false prestige and unfounded pretensions; it would greatly lessen the evil of illicit departmental interference with Congressional legislation, an evil which has increased, which is increasing, and which ought to be extinguished.

Under the beneficent environment of this new Senatorial franchise even those classes most averse to popular influences would by degrees recognize the ultimate political truth. All legislative grants and franchises, as well as public offices, are public trusts. Those who hold them are not owners or proprietors; they are only trustees; they are merely tenants, tenants at will, at the will of the people.

And thus it may be known of all men that the founders of this Republic did give to the purely democratic element an indisputable ascendency; that they granted to this popular tribunal a jurisdiction from which there can be no appeal; that in fullest faith, in confidence unshaken, they have committed the destinies of their country to the arbitrament of the conscience and the judgment of a free people. What is said above relates to rights granted; it has no relation to natural rights, sometimes called inherent—rights belonging to the citizen as a man, a person, or human, common to all. These rights, as they are not conferred, neither can they be taken away by any legislation.

Under the provisions of this amendment there would be an actual approach—a contact; not a partial sympathy; not an oblique connection or relationship between the servant and those served.

The nearer a governmental agency is to the real source of power the greater will be its value, probity, and efficiency. Direct responsibility breeds honesty, and good faith sustains the wavering, encourages the timid, and what is of fully as much consequence, it detects and defeats the unworthy, the incompetent, and the corrupt.

Members of this body are now chosen by political agents, acting for the people. Why should not the principals themselves make that choice? Were this amendment in effect to-day the constituencies of the members of the two Houses of Congress would yet be quite different, if that be a condition worthy of attention. For more than fifty years, under the early practice, members of the House were chosen by the people of the whole State upon a single ticket; but this no longer obtains. Wherefore, were this amendment in force, the Senator would be chosen by and would represent the whole mass of voters; the Representative would, as he now does, in a special sense represent the people of the district or portion of the State from which he is sent, and wherein he usually resides.

Government for the people is a phrase easily flexed and much abused. Ivan the Terrible, the White Czar, first of the Romanoffs famous in history, claimed that his administration of affairs was a government for the people.

Government by the people is an expression more stable, standing for a practice and policy which has been greatly aggrandized since the era of 1776, both here and elsewhere. At that time what was known or realized of governments by the people?

It is true there was the House of Commons in England, whose members were chosen by suffrage, but the right of suffrage was very closely restricted; hardly one man in five hundred of the whole population voted.

In France, government by the people had yet scarcely been heard of. In Spain, Italy, Austria, Germany, throughout Europe (except in Switzerland, where freedom, like a strong man armed, kept her house in the fastnesses of the high Alps), there prevailed the same system of personal hereditary despotism. Now, in all these countries popular suffrage has become in some degree a recognized political element, parliamentary representation has obtained a foothold, and constitutional limitations upon the powers of the ruler have been more or less established. In some of these, as in England and France, progress herein has been very great, in others less, but none have remained unmoved. Here, among our own States, the same kind of progress has been made, but as it begun and proceeded from a line already much advanced, these very sweeping changes in our domestic rule have not been so clearly marked or noted.

At the time of the adoption of the Federal Constitution, in 1789, none of the States gave to their citizens the unqualified right to vote, and very few of them afforded the opportunity of its exercise as to any considerable number of official positions. Nearly every office in the States was filled by appointment either by the Legislature or the chief executive. Even the voting for members of the Legislature was not general, as may be well enough inferred from the clause concerning the election of members of the House of Representatives:

> The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the Legislature.

At present all public offices, including the judicial, in the States, and even in the smaller subdivisions of counties and townships, have become for the most part elective. Manhood suffrage has everywhere become general, almost unqualified.

To say nothing at this time of other consequences, the operation of the late amendments to the Federal Constitution, conferring the right of suffrage upon men of color, added largely to the number of voters.

Yet even this may appear of less moment, indeed is somewhat inconsiderable in the account, when compared with the vast increase in the body of electors and the enlargement of the use of the ballot made by these organic changes in the law of the States during the lapse of time from the surrender of Yorktown to the conclusion of peace at Appomattox.

So that, although this cause has been elsewhere well promoted, yet in the States of this Union the principle of popular sovereignty has made much greater advancement.

The whole mass of governments in the Old World and the whole family of Commonwealths in this Republic have within the last century moved toward the people. This movement has been quiet, gradual, but continuous, persistent, not to be impeded; there has been no retrograde or recession; with no thought of return, without haste, without rest, it has gone always forward. The history of this movement, as has been said of another, was like that of the enchanted well in the Irish legend, which lay for centuries shrouded in darkness in the midst of a gorgeous city, till some careless hand left open the door that had inclosed it and the morning sunlight for the first time flashed upon its waters. Immediately it rose responsive to the beam; it burst the barriers that confined it, submerged the city that had surrounded it, and in resistless waves, chanting music to heaven, rolled over the temples and over the palaces of the past.

Sir, there is nothing in the history of the people of these States which should induce us to check this movement, to distrust it, or to disallow its just influence in modification of the original terms of the Federal compact. The spirit of liberty which has led to the rise, progress, and consummation of the dominion of the ballot in the States should have somewhat of its free course in the nation.

Shall we, who have knowledge of these marvelous transformations, stand motionless upon the shore of the last century, taking no note of the tidal surge which has risen around us, which awaits, yet may not always await, our action?

In the course of one hundred years we have thrice waged war. Once for the enfranchisement of commerce upon the high seas; again for the security and amendment of our national frontier upon the south and west; lastly, war was waged bearing in it the supreme issues of Federal unity and the national life. In the storm and stress attending these severest trials of this our form of polity parties may have erred, administrations may have failed and faltered, but the people have stood firm and fast. Not the rich, not the privileged, not the few favored by birth or fortune—the love and service of the few would not have availed—but the many, the many having no rank save that God-given, a little lower than the angels, belonging to no class or order but that of freemen—these have fought our battles, enlarged our borders, have rescued liberty from every enemy.

Whatever else may be said of it, the course and grammar of the nation's life are most plainly manifested in two directions, by two overshadowing effects: externally, in the acquisition of territory; internally, by the extension of the elective franchise and of the subjects to which it has been made applicable. But this development internally has not so far touched our Federal relations, because the franchise, in its use, is applicable as yet to but one subject therein, the membership of the House of Representatives.

The passage of this amendment would be in accord with the law of our growth; it would bestow upon the people a gift entirely worthy of their acceptance and of our proffer.

Sir, we are preparing for the exhibition of a splendid international pageant commemorative of the discovery and settlement of this continent. In the imperial commercial metropolis of the great lakes, that urban miracle of the century, we are to show from our own country, we are to behold from others, whatever is most excellent in nature, art, or industry. Many a medal will be cast, many a souvenir will be designed in honor of this event so notable. It would be most felicitous should we signalize it by the submission and adoption of this amendment, thus publishing to this grand ecumenical council of the world's commerce and exchanges that the great Republic of the West had given to its people direct control of the legislative department of the Government.

Such an act would be a monument of the age, worthy of its genius and fortunes; more enduring than the Eiffel Tower, more imperishable than the column of Trajan or the arch of Titus, which have for centuries marked and adorned the site of the Eternal City. Herein the right, truly divine, of self-government, the sovereign rule and dominion of the people, would be proclaimed, vindicated, justified, glorified in the eyes of all earth's inhabitants to the latest posterity.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to refer the joint resolution to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The motion was agreed to.

SILVER COINAGE.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I desire to submit some remarks at this time upon that part of the President's annual message which relates to silver coinage.

THE PRESIDENT'S OBJECTIONS TO FREE COINAGE REVIEWED.

The act of July 14, 1890, to which the President refers in his message, was a compromise measure. The Senate passed a bill providing for free bimetallic coinage. The House amended it by a substitute, providing for the purchase of silver bullion and the issuance of Treasury notes thereon, redeemable in bullion. It was known as the bullion-redemption bill. The Senate refused to concur. A conference committee was appointed, which reported the compromise measure which is now the law.

The law provides for the purchase of four and a half million ounces of silver per month and the issuance of legal-tender Treasury notes thereon at the market value of the bullion.

THESE NOTES ARE REDEEMABLE IN COIN, either gold or silver, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary is required to coin sufficient of the silver bullion so purchased to provide for the redemption of the notes.

The law has increased the circulation by the difference between the coinage value of $24,000,000 worth of silver bullion and 54,000,000 ounces of silver bullion per annum. It has also increased the price of silver bullion. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, before the silver agitation commenced, the average price of silver was a little over 93⅛ ($0.93537) cents per ounce. During the last fiscal year the average price has been a little more than $1.05 ($1.052935) per ounce.

THE WAR ON SILVER AND THE FALLING OFF of the Asiatic demand have now reduced the price of that metal to about 95 cents an ounce. The tendency of the act of 1890 is to enhance the price of silver by creating an additional demand for it. But it is demonstrated that nothing short of free coinage will advance silver to par with gold at the ratio of 16 to 1 and keep it there.

THE PRESIDENT HAS BEEN MISINFORMED

with regard to the predictions of those who voted for free coinage in the last Congress. He says:

> The ablest advocates of free coinage in the last Congress were most confident in their predictions that the purchases by the Government required by law (the law of 1890) would at once bring the price of silver to $1.2929 per ounce, which would make the bullion value of a dollar 100 cents and hold it there.

I know nothing of private opinions expressed to the President, but no member of either House who voted for free coinage in the last Congress, so far as my information goes, ever expressed such an opinion in the debate. On the contrary, every Democrat who expressed any opinion with regard to the bill as it finally passed declared that it was a step backward; that its tendency would be further and be detrimental to the cause of free coinage. The free-coinage Republicans, however, believed that a larger use of silver by the United States, for which the act provided, would furnish more currency and tend to enhance the price of silver. They stated that in their opinion it was a step in the right direction; that it was all they could get; and that they preferred it to no legislation.

I have examined with care the debates in both Houses, and fail to find any expression on the part of any free-coinage advocate to sustain

THE STATEMENT IN THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

I must, therefore, conclude that he has been misinformed as to the views of the advocates of free coinage so far as publicly expressed.

I do not believe that the force and effect of the present law was then or is now understood. The opponents of free coinage, who offered the law as an alternative to no legislation, may find further legislation necessary

TO RELIEVE THEMSELVES FROM AN UNCOMFORTABLE POSITION.

If the present law should destroy gold monometallism and fail to give the country the bimetallic system, dissatisfaction may arise in many quarters, and all parties may consent to resort to free coinage as the only possible solution.

The act of July 14, 1890, recognizes that it is—

> The established policy of the United States to maintain the two metals on a parity with each other upon the present legal ratio, or such ratio as may be provided by law.

MARK THE LANGUAGE:

"It being the established policy of the United States to maintain the two metals on a parity upon the present legal ratio."

No reference is made to the coined dollars. They can be made equal to each other by the stamp of the Government and a promise to redeem the silver dollar with the gold dollar. But the act goes further, and declares it to be the policy of the United States to maintain 412½ grains of standard silver at the same value as 25.8 grains of standard gold. This can not be done by redeeming silver dollars in gold dollars. Both metals must be used as money

BY THE FREE AND UNLIMITED COINAGE OF EACH,

The fluctuations in the price of silver since it was excluded from the mint demonstrate that the equality in value of 412½ grains of standard silver and 25.8 grains of standard gold can not be maintained while the one can be exchanged at the mint for a dollar and the other can not. Twenty-five and eight-tenths grains of standard gold are always worth a dollar, because they can be exchanged at the mint for a dollar.

PREVIOUS TO THE DEMONETIZATION OF SILVER

412½ grains of standard silver would always sell for a dollar in the market, because they could be exchanged for a dollar at the mint. No power on earth can maintain the parity of the two metals while one is excluded from the mint and subject to fluctuations in the market and the other is not. The parity of the two metals can be maintained at the ratio established by law only by the free and unlimited coinage of both. Consequently, free bimetallic coinage is as declared in the act of 1890. Whatever may have been the views of the advocates of free coinage in the last Congress as to the effect of the act of 1890 in advancing and maintaining the price of silver, it is manifest that the majority of the two Houses who voted for the bill expected and intended that the law should raise the price of an ounce of fine silver to $1.2929 and keep it there; otherwise they would not have stated in the act that such was "the established policy of the United States."

"THE ESTABLISHED POLICY OF THE UNITED STATES,"

THE DECLARED INTENT AND PURPOSE OF THE ACT

have not been carried out in practice. It has not maintained the parity of the two metals. Further legislation is necessary for that purpose. Free bimetallic coinage is the only method by which the parity of the two metals has been or can be maintained. Will Congress abandon the established policy of the Government, or will it maintain such policy by free and unlimited bimetallic coinage?

WHEN BIMETALLIC COINAGE WAS ABANDONED

by the demonetization of silver, it is estimated that the gold and silver coin in the world amounted to about $7,500,000,000. This coin was, as expressed by the royal commission of England, practically one money for the purpose of commercial exchanges and as reserves for both public and private financial institutions. There has been no material increase in the gold coin of the world since silver was demonetized. The annual product has been mostly absorbed for non-monetary purposes. The gold coin of the world at present does not exceed $3,750,000,000, or about one-half of the aggregate of gold and silver coin in existence eighteen years ago. If $7,500,000,000 of coin were not too much in 1873, can it be shown that one-half of that amount is sufficient now?

THE PARITY OF GOLD AND SILVER COIN

maintained by a promise of redemption in gold does not enlarge the basis of circulation and credit. In such case silver coin is as much credit money as paper. The paper and the silver are both bought in the market and promises to pay printed or stamped thereon.

THE POLICY OF THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT

since silver was demonetized has not been in accordance with the established policy of the United States to maintain the parity of the two metals at the ratio fixed by law. That Department has discriminated against silver in the payment of the public debt, and thereby degraded and depreciated the white metal, contrary to the established policy of the United States. Every obligation of the Government is, and always has been, payable in silver as well as in gold, but the Secretary of the Treasury has uniformly paid the bondholders in gold alone when it was for the interest of the United States to pay in silver.

THE LAW ON THIS SUBJECT

is concisely and distinctly stated in the following resolution of Congress, passed on January 28, 1878:

Whereas by the act entitled "An act to strengthen the public credit," approved March 18, 1869, it was provided and declared that the faith of the United States was thereby solemnly pledged to the payment in coin, or its equivalent, of all the interest-bearing obligations of the United States, except in cases where the law authorizing the issue of such obligations had expressly provided that the same might be paid in lawful money or other currency than gold and silver; and

Whereas all the bonds of the United States authorized to be issued by the act entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," approved July 14, 1870, by the terms of said act, were declared to be redeemable in coin of the then present standard value, bearing interest payable semi-annually in such coin; and

Whereas all bonds of the United States authorized to be issued under the act entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," approved January 14, 1875, are required to be of the description of bonds of the United States described in the said act of Congress approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt;" and

Whereas at the date of the passage of said act of Congress last aforesaid, to wit, the 14th day of July, 1870, the coin of the United States of standard value of that date included silver dollars of the weight of 412½ grains each, declared by the act approved January 18, 1837, entitled "An act supplementary to the act entitled 'An act establishing a mint and regulating the coins of the United States,'" to be a legal tender of payment, according to their nominal value, for any sums whatever: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That all the bonds of the United States issued or authorized to be issued under the said acts of Congress hereinbefore recited are payable, principal and interest, at the option of the Government of the United States, in silver dollars, of the coinage of the United States, containing 412½ grains each of standard silver; and that to restore to its coinage such silver coins as a legal tender in payment of said bonds, principal and interest, is not in violation of the public faith, nor in derogation of the rights of the public creditor. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Forty-fifth Congress, second session, volume 7, part 1, page 627.)

If the Secretary of the Treasury had exercised the discretion confided in him by the Bland act, and bought and coined $4,000,000 worth of silver bullion per month and paid it out to the bondholders according to contract,

SILVER WOULD HAVE BEEN REMONETIZED LONG AGO.

Silver would then have been the money of the bondholders, and they were powerful enough to see to it that their money was not degraded or depreciated.

The Treasury notes issued in the purchase of four and a half million ounces of silver bullion per month under the act of 1890 are made redeemable in gold or silver coin, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury. The language of the act is that—

Upon demand of the holder of any of the Treasury notes herein provided for the Secretary of the Treasury shall, under such regulations as he may prescribe, redeem such notes in gold or silver coin, at his discretion, it being the established policy of the United States to maintain the two metals on a parity with each other upon the present legal ratio. * * * That he shall coin of the silver bullion purchased under the provisions of this act as much as may be necessary to provide for the redemption of the Treasury notes herein provided for.

The discretion is manifestly given to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to maintain the parity of the two metals,

NOT TO DEGRADE SILVER BY GIVING A PREFERENCE TO GOLD, which had been the practice of the Treasury Department.

It has been suggested that silver will not be used as provided by law for the purpose of redemption of Treasury notes, but that gold will be bought by the sale of bonds and the national debt increased to redeem Treasury notes, while the silver provided for that purpose lies idle in the Treasury.

SUCH A SUGGESTION IS IN PLAIN VIOLATION OF THE LAW.

There is no law authorizing the Treasury Department to issue bonds to buy gold to redeem Treasury notes issued under the act of 1890.

Reference has been made to the act of January 14, 1875, providing for the resumption of specie payments. That act provides that—

On and after the 1st day of January, A. D. 1879, the Secretary of the Treasury shall redeem, in coin, the United States legal-tender notes then outstanding, on their presentation for redemption at the office of the assistant treasurer of the United States in the city of New York, in sums of not less than $50. And to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare and provide for the redemption in this act authorized or required, he is authorized to use any surplus revenues, from time to time, in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and to issue, sell, and dispose of, at not less than par in coin, either of the descriptions of bonds of the United States described in the act of Congress approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," with like qualities, privileges, and exemptions, to the extent necessary to carry this act into full effect, and to use the proceeds thereof for the purposes aforesaid.

The act authorized the sale of bonds to redeem, in coin, the Treasury notes then (on the 1st of January, 1879) outstanding, and none other.

THERE IS NOT A SHADOW OF AUTHORITY

in the resumption act, or any other act of Congress, to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell bonds and buy gold with which to redeem the Treasury notes issued under the act of 1890. There is no alternative for the Treasury Department but to use silver dollars to redeem Treasury notes, unless there is gold in the Treasury to enable the Secretary to exercise his discretion. With five hundred millions of silver coin and silver bullion awaiting coinage, and 54,000,000 ounces of silver to be accumulated annually, it is hardly possible that the Secretary of the Treasury will be able to avoid the use of silver for the purpose of redemption as contemplated by the act of 1890.

The President informs us that certain powers exist in the Treasury Department, and certain assurances have been given, but as to what assurances have been given, or what powers are to be exercised to maintain the parity in the use of coined dollars and their paper representatives. He says:

Under existing legislation it is in the power of the Treasury Department to maintain that essential condition of national finance as well as of commercial prosperity—the parity in use of the coin dollars and their paper representatives. The assurance that these powers would be freely and unhesitatingly used has done much to produce and sustain favorable business legislation.

IT WOULD BE INTERESTING TO KNOW what these assurances were and what powers are to be freely and unhesitatingly used. The President is too good a lawyer to contend that a law authorizing the sale of bonds to buy coin to redeem greenbacks outstanding in January, 1879, would furnish authority for the sale of bonds to buy gold to redeem Treasury notes issued under the act of 1890. If he had not expressly declared in his message that free coinage of silver would be disastrous it would be reasonable to suppose that the assurances given would be a return to bimetallic coinage,

THE ONLY METHOD BY WHICH THE PARITY OF THE TWO METALS

has been or can be maintained. There is no danger of a silver basis if gold and silver are coined, as formerly, upon the same terms and conditions without discrimination against either. I submit, however, to the advocates of the gold standard if the purchase of four and a half million ounces of silver per month, which, deducting the silver used in the arts, is more than the American product, may not in time

DESTROY THE GOLD STANDARD IN THIS COUNTRY?

If the gold advocates continue to denounce coined silver dollars as 75-cent dollars, and the holders of Treasury notes are compelled to take such dollars in redemption and can get none other, may it not endanger the parity between coined gold and silver dollars and increase the disparity of the two metals?

There is no middle ground. The money of ultimate redemption, which forms the basis of circulation and credit, must be limited and determined as to amount by gold or by silver, or by the aggregate of both.

THE MONEY FUNCTION PERFORMED BY THE PRECIOUS METALS

is a limitation of quantity. From time immemorial, previous to the demonetization of silver, the basis of the world's money and credit was the aggregate of the two metals combined. The attempt to discard silver and use gold alone has been disastrous. The Secretary of the Treasury never uttered a more obvious truth than when he informed the bankers of New York that

THERE IS NOT GOLD ENOUGH FOR USE AS MONEY.

If he had told them the whole truth, he would have informed them that there is no possibility of increasing the metallic money of the world except by the restoration of silver to the place it occupied as a money metal prior to 1873. Silver can not supplement gold as money of ultimate redemption, so long as the Government speculates in it as a commodity and denies it free coinage at the mint.

The President has a proper regard for the producers and laborers, and expresses his concern for them in unmistakable terms. He says:

> The producers of the country, its farmers and laborers, have the highest interest that every dollar, paper or coin, issued by the Government, shall be as good as any other. If there is one less valuable than another, its sure and constant errand will be to pay them for their toil and for their crops. The money-lender will protect himself by stipulating for payment in gold, but the laborer has never been able to do that.

It is true that the laborers and producers are overmatched by the cunning and avarice of money-lenders, and are compelled to submit to usurious contracts. But when the Government combines with the exploiters in money, the situation of the farmers and laborers is deplorable. It was the Government that reduced the volume of real money of ultimate redemption about one-half by demonetizing silver, and by that means in a corresponding ratio. Congress, however, never changed the contract with the bondholders from a contract payable in either gold or silver to a contract payable in gold alone. The executive department, without the authority of Congress, has done this.

DEPRECIATED THE PRICE OF PROPERTY AND LABOR

Every obligation of the Government is and always has been payable in silver coin, but the Treasury Department has refused to pay in such coin. That Department ever since the close of the war has maintained that silver was not good enough for the bondholder, although greenbacks who fought the battles of the Union. If the Treasury Department would make no discrimination in the use of gold and silver in the payment of national obligations, who would be the first to receive the despised silver coin, the bondholder or the laborer? It is the fault of the Government, and particularly the administration of the Treasury Department, if the cheap greenbacks were paid to the soldier, while the dear gold dollars were paid to the rich money-lender; it is the fault of the Treasury Department if the best money is paid to the bondholder and a depreciated currency paid to the laborer.

The producers, laborers, and farmers of this country are willing to accept silver, provided the Government will treat it as money equally with gold. They knew no difference between gold and silver coin until and deprived it of its money functions.

I am glad that the President is in favor of a larger use of silver, but I can not concur in the means proposed by him to accomplish that end. He says:

> There is, however, I am sure, a growing sentiment in Europe in favor of a larger use of silver, and I know of no more effectual way of promoting this sentiment than by accumulating gold here. A scarcity of gold in the European reserves will be the most persuasive argument for the use of silver.

In other words, the President proposes to take the gold away from Europe until her reserves will be so scarce as to compel her to use silver or suffer bankruptcy. It would have been interesting how we are to accumulate gold. Since silver was demonetized, and the producers of this country compelled to buy gold with which to pay obligations contracted to be paid in either silver, gold, or paper, the people have been burdened almost beyond endurance. They have been compelled to sell their wheat, cotton, and other farm products at from 30 to 40 per cent discount to buy gold, because the Government would not allow them to pay their debts in any other kind of money, no matter what the contract stipulated for.

IF THE PRESIDENT HAD SUGGESTED

THE PRESIDENT NOW RECOMMENDS THE CONTINUANCE of this sacrifice on the part of the producers until the moneyed institutions of Europe are deprived of their gold reserves and required to use silver. He must know that if we buy gold until we deprive Europe of her reserve we must give more for gold than anybody else will give or we can not get it. We must sell wheat, cotton, and other farm products cheaper than they can be procured in Europe, Asia, Africa, or any other part of the world to buy gold enough to ruin the Rothschilds and the other money kings of Europe.

Is the President aware that European money-lenders have a call on this country for several thousand millions, and that if gold is the only money to be paid bondholders the money kings of Europe for a vast amount of gold? Does he not remember that last spring, in consequence of the failure of the Barings, the reserves of gold in Europe became short, and that our European creditors drew on us for about $75,000,000 of gold to increase their reserves? Does he not know that they have the power to continue that process almost indefinitely, certainly until they have collected the thousands of millions which we owe them?

CAN CALL ON US AT ANY TIME

The President ought to consider that the rejection of silver as real money eighteen years ago contracted the basis of circulation and credit nearly one-half and reduced the price of property and services enormously:

THAT FARMS IN ENGLAND AND AMERICA,

unaffected by emigration, have depreciated in value from 40 to 50 per cent; and that the failure of the Barings disclosed the fact that the reserves of the moneyed institutions of the world were altogether insufficient to sustain the present fabric of business and credit. Every moneyed institution in the world since that failure has been struggling to buy gold to increase its reserves and avoid bankruptcy. If no other means could be devised to stop contraction, furnish more money, revive business, and produce prosperity, it might be necessary to test the question whether Europe or the United States would first be forced into bankruptcy in a contest to accumulate gold.

Why should we want gold scarce in Europe? If it is scarce there it will be dear. Europe is the market where we sell our farm products and buy gold.

IF GOLD IS SCARCE AND DEAR WHERE WE BUY, it will take more products to acquire a given amount of it than it would if it were plentiful and cheap, and we must sell our wheat and cotton cheaper than we otherwise would. Would it be a calamity if some of our gold should go to Europe and make money plentiful there if we had silver in its place? Would we not get more gold for our wheat and cotton than we would if gold were scarce in Europe?

I DIFFER WITH THE PRESIDENT.

I would not attempt to accumulate gold at the enormous sacrifice which our farmers would be compelled to make by being forced to sell their products cheaper than Asiatics or Europeans. The Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Foster, diagnosed the case correctly and pointed out the root of the evil with which the commercial world must contend, when he stated that there is not gold enough for use as money. It can not be shown that if silver were remonetized by free coinage, and added to gold, there would be too much of both metals for use as money. Previous to the demonetization of silver, when gold and silver were practically one money,

THERE WAS NOT TOO MUCH REAL MONEY IN THE WORLD.

Since that time the aggregate product of gold and silver of the world has been barely sufficient to keep pace with population and business. It was governmental action which reduced the basis of circulation and of credit to the insufficient supply of gold. That governmental action must be reversed and silver restored before the productive forces of the civilized world can be vitalized and put in motion.

WHILE FREE AND UNLIMITED BIMETALLIC COINAGE

is the only remedy for the financial troubles of the commercial world, still the Treasury Department can do much to advance the cause of honest money. Why not adopt the policy of France? Although France has stopped silver coinage, yet she does not seek to degrade the silver coin which is circulating among the people. More than half the silver coin in Europe is circulating in France on a par with gold, a full legal tender at the ratio of 15½ to 1. Every obligation of France is payable in silver or gold coin, at the option of the Government. France pays her creditors in either gold or silver, whichever is most convenient for the Government. Every obligation of the United States is also payable in either gold or silver coin, but the Secretary of the Treasury notwithstanding he has plenty of silver at his disposal. The result is that the people of France believe in silver; their confidence in the white metal is not destroyed. But the people of the United States are told by high officials that our standard silver dollar is a 75-cent dollar.

PAYS IN GOLD AT ALL HAZARDS,

By the agreement of November, 1885, between the nations forming the Latin Union, namely, France, Italy, Greece, Belgium, and Switzerland, each member thereof was bound to redeem its silver coin which might be held by any other of the contracting powers at the expiration of five years, upon receiving one year's notice.

NONE OF THE CONTRACTING POWERS GAVE THE NOTICE.

The gold-standard contractionists of France insisted that the Government should give the notice and require the other members of the union to take their silver and pay gold for it at the rate of $1.33 per ounce. In 1890, when the time expired, France held of the coin of the other contracting powers over 600,000,000 francs, which she was at liberty to compel Italy, Greece, Belgium, and Switzerland to take at $1.33 an ounce. She did not give the notice or require the other members of the union to redeem their silver. Why did she not dispose of her silver? Simply because

SHE WAS UNWILLING TO DEGRADE SILVER.

Any person holding an obligation against France must take either gold or silver, as the Government may determine. She keeps her reserves of gold and silver about equal. Even Germany, who first followed the United States in demonetizing silver, pays her creditors in either silver or gold, at the option of the Government.

England retains her gold by raising the rate of interest. The Treasury Department of the United States, however, concedes that silver is not good money for bondholders, and even suggests the purchase of gold to redeem Treasury notes issued under the act of 1890.

MY ADVICE TO THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY IS to do the best he can for the Government; to pay the creditors of the Government in any money stipulated in the contract, and to cease discriminating in favor of the bondholders against the people.

It may be asked, who are the parties interested in degrading silver to a commodity? That question is easily answered.

They are two powerful classes who have their principal place of business in London. One class desires cheap silver for the purpose of speculating in Asiatic products. The purchasing power of silver in Asia is about the same that it was before it was demonetized in the western world. Dealers in Asiatic products coin it into rupees or other Asiatic money, and sell it at par in exchange for Asiatic products. This powerful class of middlemen have made hundreds of millions by the purchase of cheap silver in the United States for use as money in Asia. They enjoy a similar harvest to that gathered by the merchants of San Francisco during the war. Those merchants purchased goods for greenbacks and sold them on the Pacific coast for gold, and pocketed the difference. The dealers in Asiatic products buy silver at from 30 to 40 per cent discount, sell it in Asia at par, and make the difference.

BUY CHEAP SILVER IN THE UNITED STATES,

The other class of persons who are interested in depressing silver are investors in bonds and securities,

WHO DESIRE COLLECTIONS IN DEAR MONEY.

The money kings of Europe have invested in the United States several thousand millions. The great banks of New York are investors and collectors on foreign account. They take orders from their European employers. They give directions to country banks, which are never disobeyed. The business community is required by the banking fraternity, as a condition of accommodation, to adopt the same financial policy which they advocate. The press follows the banks and the merchants. The Treasury Department, through the banking fraternity, receives orders from London, which it seldom disobeys. The people of the United States who owe thousands of millions to European investors are the victims. While dear money and cheap property are disastrous to the producers it is a golden harvest for their creditors.

I REGRET THAT THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY

feels called upon at any time to visit New York or take orders in any form from the agents of foreign investors. I would like to see him independent, acting in the interest of the people of the United States, as the Bank of France acts for France, the Bank of Berlin for Germany, or the Bank of England for Great Britain.

THE MODE OF MANIPULATION

adopted by these two classes to depress the price of silver is novel. India is required to pay annually, at the Bank of England, 880,000,000 for interest on her public debt. This interest is collected by the issuance of council bills by the Bank of England, which are drafts on India payable in silver rupees. It must be remembered that they are payable in India; nowhere else. These bills are sold on the London market to the highest bidder and bought by persons who wish to make remittances to India for cotton, jute, wheat, or any other commodity. In the ordinary course of business about $2,500,000 of these bills are sold each week. But in case it suits the convenience of speculators in Indian products and of investors in bonds to depress the price of silver, it is only necessary to sell more council bills than the market requires. If a million or two of them beyond the requirements of the market for remittance are sold, their price goes down, and with it the price of silver declines, because these bills are orders for silver.

WHEN SILVER WENT TO $1.21 AN OUNCE

it was the boast of the financial manager for India that he sold council bills several weeks in advance and broke the market for silver. By this method the Bank of England is enabled to sell silver "short" without the necessity of filling its "shorts;" because these bills are payable only in India, and if more of them are sold than are required for remittance to that country they must decline in the market. Why should we be subject to this manipulation? There have been since 1850 than were required for monetary purposes. From 1840 to 1850 the annual supply of gold and silver of the world did not exceed $40,000,000. There was a sudden increase after the discovery of gold in California. In 1851 the world's product was $107,000,000. The discovery of gold in Australia increased the annual output to nearly $190,000,000. This wonderful addition to the supply of the precious metals was not a disaster, but a blessing. From that time onward the combined product of the two metals has been constant, with a gradual increase, until now the world's annual output of gold and silver has reached about $250,000,000. The supply of gold and silver, if both metals had been used as money, would have been sufficient to keep pace with the increase of population and business, and would have furnished a basis for circulation and credit that would have continued the prosperity which was inaugurated by the wonderful discoveries in California and Australia in 1848 and 1852. But the rejection of silver has practically cut off the supply of the precious metals for the creation of new money. A money famine has been inaugurated, not by the exhaustion of the mines, but by the exploiters in money to gratify the avarice of speculators and bondholders.

The objector says that free coinage in this country

WOULD FLOOD THE UNITED STATES

with the silver of the world. This assertion is made without the slightest evidence. In the first place, there has been no silver produced to create an oversupply. On the contrary, the production of the two metals has been barely sufficient for monetary purposes. Previous to 1890 the entire product of the silver of the world was annually consumed. The first accumulation of bullion which occurred after the demonetization of silver was the small amount bought in New York on speculation in anticipation of a rise in price on account of Congressional legislation.

THAT AMOUNT HAS NEARLY ALL DISAPPEARED.

Only about three or four millions of it are left. Under the present law we buy twice as much silver as we did under the Bland act. The Asiatic demand has fallen off on account of poor crops in that country and by reason of the manipulation of the middlemen by the use of council bills and other devices to depress the price. No silver can return from Asia. The exports from that country exceed the imports, and there is no occasion for it to part with either silver or gold.

The only cheap silver in the world is the three or four millions in this country in the shape of bullion. Every country in the world, except Mexico, puts more silver in its legal-tender silver money than we do; that is, they put more silver in their silver coin in proportion to gold than is contained in the standard dollar.

IT IS ALLEGED THAT EUROPE

would send her silver here in case of free coinage. The entire amount of silver coin in Europe does not exceed $1,100,000,000, and over $700,000,000 of that amount are in France. No other country of Europe could spare any; they are already deficient in their silver. Germany stopped selling silver fifteen years ago on account of the clamor of the people, and has since kept all the silver she then had. France certainly will not sell her silver, because if she desired to do so she already has the privilege of disposing of over 600,000,000 francs of the coin of Italy, Greece, Belgium, and Switzerland, which she has in her possession. She has the right to compel those countries to take these 600,000,000 francs and PAY IN GOLD AT THE RATE OF $1.33 AN OUNCE.

But she does not do it. The reason assigned by her financiers for not selling her foreign silver coin is that it would degrade and depreciate silver, which is largely held by the people, destroy confidence, and produce financial disorder. If, then, she would not sell her silver in Europe for $1.33 an ounce, is it probable that she would ship it to the United States, in case of free coinage, and sell it to us at $1.2929?

Another objection urged against free coinage is the erroneous assumption that it would give the silver miners

MORE THAN THE MARKET VALUE FOR THEIR PRODUCT.

The discovery and development of the gold and silver mines of the West furnished the basis for credit which made it possible to prosecute the war and preserve the Union. Mining for the precious metals laid the foundation for all the States and Territories west of Kansas, furnished employment to hundreds of thousands of industrious citizens, provided a market for the commodities of all the States, contributed largely to the revenues of the Government by the consumption of foreign products paying heavy duties, bound the two oceans by several continental rai roads, built numerous towns and cities, and converted the vast region which fifty years ago the geographer marked as the Great American Desert into fertile fields and happy homes.

The discovery and development of silver mines at the critical time when the yield of gold was declining rejoiced the hearts of the American people and held out to them

THE PROMISE OF CONTINUED PROSPERITY.

Silver had been used as money from prehistoric times. It was the money of the Constitution and laws of the United States. Europe was flooded with literature to show that it was a more reliable, safer, and better money metal than gold. A generation of hardy pioneers had expended their energies and exhausted their fortunes in the discovery and development of silver mines which were found in every State and Territory between the Pacific Ocean and the eastern slope of the Rocky Mountains.

Under these circumstances the United States, a debtor nation, and the greatest producer of silver, inaugurated the legislation

WHICH REJECTED SILVER AS A MONEY METAL.

The price of silver immediately thereafter declined, and thousands of silver-mine owners were ruined by the depreciation of their property. The discount on silver produced from the mines that would pay to work, notwithstanding the decline of the price of silver, has amounted to more than $150,000,000. Over $70,000,000 of this discount has been paid into the Treasury of the United States by the difference between the market price at which the Government bought silver and the coined value at which it was issued in standard dollars or their representatives.

FREE COINAGE WOULD RESTORE SILVER

as a money metal for all the people, but it would not give the mine owner more than the market value for his silver. If 412½ grains of standard silver could, as formerly, be exchanged at the Mint for a dollar, the market price of that quantity of silver would, as formerly, be just one dollar. There is no difference between the mint value and the market value of gold. The same was true of silver before it was demonetized, and it would be true again under free coinage.

All that is necessary to establish free coinage is an act of Congress opening the mints of the United States to silver upon the same terms and conditions that apply to gold. We know from the experience of thousands of years that such legislation would restore the parity between the two metals and maintain it. Why should we not do it? Why should this country be governed by orders from European investors and bondholders?

WHY SHOULD WE NOT HAVE AN INDEPENDENT FINANCIAL POLICY?

The manipulators of Asiatic products and the creditors who desire dear money—dearer than the money of the contract—know full well that free coinage in this country would break the corner they hold on the money of the world; enhance the value of farm products equally with silver, and restore prosperity to the United States. Why should our farmers be compelled to produce wheat, cotton, and other farm products on a gold basis and sell in competition with Asiatics who use cheaper money? Why should the middlemen of London be allowed to buy cheap silver in this country, coin it into rupees, and sell it at par in India and make the difference?

THE SILVER QUESTION CAN NOT BE IGNORED.

If we continue to disparage silver while the law compels redemption of Treasury notes in standard dollars, we will produce disaster. The amount of silver that we have and that which we are accumulating under existing law make it a necessity that this Government shall see to it that silver is not a commodity to be depressed at the pleasure of English manipulators.

THE EFFORT TO MAKE ONE DOLLAR AS GOOD AS ANOTHER

by redeeming silver dollars in gold dollars can not succeed. It is gratifying to know that we have a law on the statute book which makes it unlawful to attempt it. The country must know sooner or later that every Treasury note that is issued is liable to be redeemed in silver. The Treasury Department has had it in its power to refuse to use the white metal as money in the payment of the national debt. It can not refuse to pay out silver in redemption, because it will be impossible under existing statutes to obtain sufficient gold with which to redeem these Treasury notes. In this situation is it not better to meet the question squarely? Open the mints to free coinage; make silver equal to gold. It is impossible to get too much silver.

THE FINANCE COMMITTEE OF THE SENATE

at the last session reported in favor of an increase of the circulating medium to the extent of over $200,000,000 by the issuance of 2 per cent bonds to be taken up by the banks dollar for dollar. They declared that we needed that much addition to our circulating medium. The law of 1890, requiring the purchase of four and a half million ounces of silver bullion per month, was then in force. This proposed increase of $200,000,000 was in addition to the silver purchases now required by law. Every person acquainted with the circumstances knows that it would take years to obtain two hundred millions of silver in addition to our present purchases.

THERE IS NOT THE SLIGHTEST DANGER OF A FLOOD OF SILVER;

there is no place from whence it could come; there is no possibility of getting more of it than the country needs for its growing population. Why should we not treat silver as real money and thus become the clearing house of the world, not the dumping ground for cheap silver? In that event there would be no cheap silver.

I APPEAL TO EVERY PATRIOTIC AMERICAN CITIZEN to aid in the establishment of an independent financial policy for this country; to disregard London speculators in Asiatic farm products and European investors in American securities. We require more money; we need to enlarge the basis of circulation and credit, which can only be done by supplementing gold with silver; it can be brought about only by returning to the money of the Constitution—gold and silver coin. Free coinage of both metals has been tried for thousands of years; it is no experiment. The demonetization of silver has proved disastrous. After thousands of years of experience with the use of both of the precious metals as money, the possessors of fixed capital had no right to meddle with the standards.

When the mines were unproductive the people had to submit to the evils which always resulted from a scanty supply of money. The history of the world shows that the automatic theory of money, which is the regulation of the volume by the supply of the precious metals, has always worked well when the mines were productive. Every civilization which has appeared from the dawn of history until now and declined when they were exhausted. When the mines of Nubia were productive, Egypt prospered; when the Ural and other mountains of Asia poured forth their treasure the Israelites, the Babylonians, the Persians, and the Phœnecians maintained civilization; when the mountains of Thrace were large producers of gold and silver Greece was the university of the learning, the art, and the science of the world; when the mountains of Spain were overturned in mining for gold and silver the legions of Rome conquered the world.

HAS GROWN AND DEVELOPED WITH PRODUCTIVE MINES,

BUT WHEN THE MINES WERE EXHAUSTED

then came the Dark Ages. At the time of Augustus, according to Jacob and Gibbon, there were in circulation in ancient Rome from eighteen hundred to two thousand million dollars of gold and silver coin, besides a vast accumulation of plate and ornament. In fourteen hundred years of gloom and despair, caused by the want of money, to less than one hundred millions. The revival of civilization waited for the discovery of gold and silver in Mexico and South America, which reanimated mining throughout the world and created modern civilization. For three hundred years the supply was constant and uninterrupted, and civilization progressed.

THE STOCK OF PRECIOUS METALS WAS REDUCED

The Spanish-American wars reduced the supply of the precious metals for a time. Between 1810 and 1840 a money famine paralyzed the energies of the civilized world. The entire annual product of gold and silver of the world during that period did not exceed $30,000,000. A slight increase from the mines of Russia from 1840 to 1850 raised the annual supply to about $40,000,000. Then came the marvelous discoveries in California and Australia. New life was infused into commerce and enterprise, and wealth and prosperity followed. Since that time the quantity of the two metals has been sufficient to furnish a basis for continued prosperity.

But the dealers in bonds, possessors of fixed incomes, and speculators in Asiatic products

HAVE CONSPIRED TO DEPRIVE THE WORLD OF THIS HERITAGE.

This time it was not the failure of the mines but the legislation and administration of the most enlightened nations on earth which deprived one of the precious metals of its money quality and produced stagnation, hard times, and bankruptcy. The United States, a debtor nation, and the largest producer of silver, led in this legislation, doubled her indebtedness by the enhanced value of money, and deprived herself of the means of payment stipulated in the contract.

THE QUESTION NOW IS,

shall this money famine inaugurated by legislation be continued? Shall the corner which the money kings of the world hold on the circulating medium be maintained? Shall prices continue to decline and money advance in value, or shall we retrace our steps, rehabilitate silver, endow it with all the attributes which it possessed before it was demonetized, place it alongside of gold, double the basis of circulation and credit, and relieve this generation of the evil effects of a money famine?

Let no politician be deceived. The question of the restoration of silver can not rest until it is settled. "Unsettled questions have no pity for the repose of mankind." Political parties and private gain count for nothing when weighed in the balance against the prosperity of the people.

I appeal to the advocates of gold: Change your policy; do right; allow the country to prosper; it will not injure you. You have gathered your harvest by the enhanced value of money. Further contraction is dangerous. You will lose more by the bankruptcy and failure of your debtors than you can extort from them by further increasing the value of money. I appeal to Congress by the only method possible—free and unlimited coinage of both of the precious metals. Treat gold and silver alike, and the value of all your coined dollars will be equal; the uncoined metals, gold and silver, will be equal to each other at the ratio of 16 to 1. Give back the money of the Constitution; restore to the people the rich heritage reserved for them in the mines of gold and silver which they have discovered and developed.

TO MAKE EVERY DOLLAR EQUAL TO EVERY OTHER DOLLAR

4. The chairman shall appoint the clerk or clerks of his committee, subject to its approval, who shall be paid at the public expense, the House having first provided therefor.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, before I make a brief statement to accompany the report just read I will report also the following order, which the Committee on Rules request to be made.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules recommend the following order:

The following select committees shall be appointed by the Speaker for the Fifty-second Congress:

On Reform in the Civil Service, to consist of thirteen members.

On Irrigation of Arid Lands in the United States, to consist of eleven members.
On Immigration and Naturalization, to consist of eleven members.
On the Quadro-Centennial of the Discovery of America, to consist of eleven members.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, the meeting of the committee taking the action that has been reported to the House was such a short time before the House convened that it was impossible to make out the written statement which usually accompanies a report of a committee. However, a brief statement, verbally made, will, I suppose, be satisfactory to the House. There are some changes made both in the number composing the committees and as to the names of one or two of the committees. Heretofore the Committee on Ways and Means has consisted of thirteen members. The Committee on Rules recommend that it be increased to fifteen members. The reason for this is the fact that since the number was fixed at thirteen members there has been a very large increase of the membership of this House; and, considering that fact, in connection with the importance of the questions under the jurisdiction of that committee, the Committee on Rules thought it but proper to increase the membership to correspond with the number of other of the large and important committees of the House.

The Committee on Indian Depredation Claims is abolished, for the reason that there was passed by the last Congress an act submitting these claims to the courts, by which it is supposed justice will be obtained without further continuing the committee.

The Committee on the Quadro-Centennial celebration is increased from nine to eleven members. The Committee on Immigration is also increased from nine to eleven members. This is a question that is certainly of not diminishing importance, and the Committee on Rules thought it was well to increase its membership to eleven.

The name of one of the committees is changed in this: Heretofore the designation of one of the committees has been "the Committee on Commerce." That is changed, and the designation of "the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce" was out of deference to the growing importance of the legislative questions that arise here concerning interstate commerce.

I believe the only other change that I deem it important to note is the method of succession to the chairmanship of a committee upon the death of a chairman. Heretofore it has been the custom for the second on a committee to succeed as a matter of right to the chairmanship. That continues except when the vacancy occurs by death. If a vacancy be occasioned by death then the Speaker designates who is to be chairman of the committee; but in case of a vacancy occurring in any other way the second on the committee succeeds to the chairmanship as heretofore. This, I believe, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. If I may interrupt the gentleman, why is it that you make that distinction between the resignation and the death of a chairman? Because if a vacancy is caused by the resignation of a chairman he is as thoroughly not a member of the House as if he were dead.

Mr. McMILLIN. That is true. The committee thought this change giving the Speaker authority to designate the chairman of a committee in the case indicated would be very proper. The matter is one entirely for the decision of the House.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I agree with the committee. I think it a good thing for the Speaker to designate the chairman of a committee where the vacancy is permanent; but I do not understand why such authority should be confined to a vacancy created by death. Why should not the authority extend as well to a vacancy occasioned by resignation—a vacancy equally permanent?

Mr. McMILLIN. I will say candidly that I do not myself see any reason why the Speaker should not make this designation in case of any permanent vacancy—a vacancy occasioned by a resignation, as well as one caused by death. If it is the desire of the House to so provide, our report can of course be amended in that respect. This, however, was an innovation——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Would the committee object to such an amendment as I have indicated? I will not offer any amendment unless it be agreeable to the committee.

Mr. McMILLIN. The committee did not discuss the question whether the authority of the Speaker should be extended in the way the gentleman suggests; and having no knowledge as to what would be the view of other members of the committee on that subject, I do not feel authorized to attempt any expression of their wish. So far as I am individually concerned I should have no objection to the gentleman's suggestion. I will say to my friend from Kentucky that the reason I did not suggest such a thing was that even the proposition in its present form is an innovation upon the rules heretofore existing in this House; and as my friend knows, I am not very rapid in innovations.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the changes I have indicated are the only changes which have been recommended by the Committee on Rules. All the other committees heretofore existing, except some special investigating committees, will continue to exist under this proposition.

One word as to the question of jurisdiction. As will be observed by the House, the committee in this report has not undertaken to fix the jurisdiction of these several committees; that matter will be embraced in a subsequent report. But it is important that the Speaker should know as early as possible what committees are to be organized, so that the work of framing the committees may proceed.

Mr. SPRINGER. My friend from Tennessee will allow me to ask whether he will not consent to an amendment of the name of the committee which is to take charge of the subject of the Columbian Exposition. When that committee was formed in the last Congress no legal name had been given to that Exhibition. Since that time an act of Congress has designated the proposed exhibition as the "Columbian Exposition." I think the name of the committee should correspond with the legal designation of the enterprise. Will the gentleman agree to such an amendment? The name embraced in the report of the Committee on Rules is the "Committee on the Quadro-Centennial of the Discovery of America."

Mr. McMILLIN. I agree with Shakespeare, Mr. Speaker, in holding that there is nothing in a name—that "a rose by any other name would smell as sweet;" and so far as I am individually concerned—I can not speak for other members of the committee—there is no objection to the change which the gentleman proposes. It was suggested in the committee that the title embraced in our report was rather long. I suggested (if I may say so without improperly divulging the secrets of the committee) that I thought there would be no objection, where this Exhibition is to be located, to calling it the "Chicago Exposition." [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I should object to that. What I desire is that we shall adopt the legal name—the Columbian Exposition. I ask unanimous consent for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] asks unanimous consent to substitute the words "Columbian Exposition" for the words "Quadro-Centennial of the Discovery of America."

Mr. McMILLIN. Seriously, Mr. Speaker, I think the change suggested is a very proper one; and if it had been proposed in the committee I believe there would have been no objection to it, but that on the contrary it would have been adopted.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the amendment proposed will be made. The Chair hears no objection. The question is upon agreeing to the report of the Committee on Rules as amended.

The report was adopted.

PAY OF CONGRESSIONAL EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to offer for present consideration the joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 1) to pay the officers and employés of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1891, on the 24th day of said month.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, authorized and instructed to pay the officers and employés of the Senate and House of Representatives, including the Capitol police, their respective salaries for the month of December, 1891, on the 24th day of said month.

Mr. SPRINGER. This does not increase any expenditure, but simply enables the employés of Congress to get their pay for the present month before Christmas. It is the customary resolution on this subject.

The resolution was read a first and second time, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ADMINISTRATION OF PENSION BUREAU.

Mr. ENLOE. I offer a resolution for reference to the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the Pension Bureau has become the most important Bureau in the Government by reason of the vast personal and pecuniary rights submitted to it for adjudication; and

Whereas it is alleged that certain employés of said Bureau did enter into a conspiracy against the public Treasury to rerate themselves and other persons in an irregular and illegal manner, which conspiracy did result in the removal of Commissioner Tanner; and

Whereas the Secretary of the Interior did afterwards cause an investigation to be made to ascertain the persons who were concerned in the rerating conspiracy, and did make a report to Congress submitting the result of his investigation; and

Whereas it is alleged that one Garrison, a file clerk in said Bureau, did at the time of said investigation take from the files and conceal the papers in the case of W. W. Dudley, late a Commissioner of Pensions, so that his name did not appear in the report of said investigation, although he was rerated prior to said report; and

Whereas it is alleged that the said Garrison has since been promoted by the Commissioner from a $1,200 to an $1,800 clerkship, with a knowledge of his conduct in this matter; and

Whereas Green B. Raum, a son of the Commissioner, has been compelled to tender his resignation in the face of charges that he has been engaged in selling the patronage of the Bureau; and

Whereas John Raum, another son of the Commissioner, has advertised through the public prints and otherwise that he is the son of the Commissioner, claiming special advantages in securing favorable action in the Pension Bureau; and

Whereas Green B. Raum, the Commissioner of Pensions, stands charged with granting official favors in exchange for personal and pecuniary favors; and

Whereas it is alleged that improper influences control the administration of said office, and that the special examiners' division, the completed files system, and the Board of Pension Appeals are made agencies for promoting personal, pecuniary, and political ends to such an extent that there is rank favoritism and unfair discrimination practiced in dealing with the soldiers, who are all equally entitled to consideration at the hands of the Bureau; and

Whereas it is believed that a thorough and searching investigation into the methods of administration which obtain in said Bureau will clear away the scandals which thicken about it, and secure an economical, just, and reputable administration of the same: Therefore,

Resolved, That a special committee of five be appointed by the Speaker to inquire concerning said charges, and all other matters relating to the conduct of the Commissioner in these matters, or to the administration of his office, which, in the judgment of said committee, may conduce to the honest, clean, just, economical, and efficient administration of said Bureau. Said committee is also authorized, in its discretion, to extend the investigation to the Board of Pension Appeals and its decisions. Said committee shall have power and authority to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to take testimony, and shall report its conclusions to this House.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Rules.

SPECIAL HOUSE EMPLOYÉ.

Mr. OUTHWAITE offered a resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That John T. Chancey be continued in the service of this House as heretofore until otherwise ordered, and that he be paid as heretofore.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. This resolution provides simply for retaining in this House a special employé recommended by the minority. In the last House a similar resolution was adopted retaining a special employé on our side; and action of the same character has been taken in previous Congresses. I therefore ask the adoption of this resolution.

The resolution was adopted.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I move that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next.

The motion was agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE NEXT WEDNESDAY.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I ask unanimous consent that when the House convenes on Wednesday next, no business shall be transacted except such as may relate to the resolution providing for a holiday recess, the swearing in of new members who may not previously have been qualified, and the appointment of committees.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS] asks unanimous consent for a general understanding that when the House meets on Wednesday next, no business shall be transacted except such as may relate to the concurrent resolution for the holiday recess of Congress, to the swearing in of new members who may then be present, and to the announcement of the committees by the Speaker.

Mr. HAYES. Would that preclude the introduction of bills? Why should not bills be introduced on that day for printing and reference?

Mr. CATCHINGS. The object of my proposition is to limit business on next Wednesday to that which I have indicated.

Mr. CARUTH. Bills can come in after the 1st of January.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS]? The Chair hears none.

PAY OF CONGRESSIONAL EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be instructed by the Speaker to enroll the joint resolution passed a few moments ago with reference to the pay of Congressional employés. Unless some provision of this kind be made, as we have not yet a Committee on Enrolled Bills, the resolution can not be enrolled for presentation to the other House and to the President.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of any rule on the subject, the Clerk will enroll the joint resolution referred to and transmit it to the Senate.

H. G. CLEMENT AND G. H. WATKINS.

Mr. STUMP presented a petition of H. G. Clement and G. H. Watkins, clerks in the folding room of the House, asking an allowance for extra work; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts.

DEATH OF HON. MELBOURNE H. FORD.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the request of the delegation from the State of Michigan, the duty devolves upon me to announce to this House the death, on the 21st day of April last, of Hon. Melbourne H. Ford, a Representative in Congress from the State of Michigan. He died very suddenly, in the fresh maturity of his very remarkable powers; and in his death the brilliant future, of which his past career gave promise, has been cut off. His obsequies were attended by a multitude of citizens of the thriving and beautiful city in which he resided, and by representative men not only from the State of Michigan but from other States of the Union.

This is not a proper occasion to enter upon a eulogy of Mr. Ford's career. He served in the Legislature of his State. He served on this floor, where he was known, respected, and beloved by many gentlemen who are members of the present Congress. I will content myself at present with simply and reverently announcing to the House the sad fact of his death, and on another occasion will ask that opportunity be given to members of this body who admired and loved him to pay tribute to his memory. I ask the adoption of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. Melbourne H. Ford, late a Representative from the State of Michigan: Therefore,

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to his memory the House do now adjourn.

Resolved, That the Clerk be directed to communicate this action to the Senate.

The resolutions were adopted; and, in accordance therewith, the House (at 12 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) adjourned until Wednesday next.

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 21, 1891.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. G BUTLER, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We worship Thee, the true and the living God, in whose hand is our life, whose are all our ways, against whom we have sinned. And yet we come with childlike confidence into the presence of our loving Father. We thank Thee for the light that comes from Thy throne penetrating the darkness of the grave. Fill us with faith in Thee, in Thy wisdom, in Thy power, in Thy love, in Thy mercy, as we gather beneath this dark cloud.

We can not understand Thee, O God. We believe that Thou art, we know that Thou art the rewarder of all of them that diligently seek Thee. Give us grace to walk obediently and humbly and trustingly and prayerfully before Thee, doing with all our might whatsoever our hands find to do, serving our generation faithfully, serving our God obediently and filially, that when the end shall come we may enter into rest.

Sanctify to these Thy servants this sad bereavement. Teach us heavenly wisdom. And hear us when we commend to Thee, O God, very tenderly Thine handmaiden in her solitude and sadness and overwhelming sorrow in her distant home. We bless Thee for her faith in Thee, and pray that Thou wilt sustain her, and comfort her, and give unto her Thy peace. Thou Judge of the widow and Father of the fatherless ones, O do Thou have these in Thy holy care and keeping. And help us that we may be strong in the day of battle, ever keeping our consciences right in the sight of God, that God's peace may keep our hearts and minds, that whenever the shaft of death may come we may be ready, ready to depart, and to be with Christ, which is far better.

Prepare us for the solemn service this day. Guide us by Thy divine counsel. Fill us with Thy good spirit. And finally, O God, when the joys and sorrows of life are ended, gather us where we shall part no more into the home—the Father's house. We ask it through Jesus, our Redeemer. Amen.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Journal of Thursday's proceedings will be read by the Secretary.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that the reading of the Journal of Thursday's proceedings be dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the Journal will be dispensed with in the absence of objection. The Chair hears no objection.

DEATH OF SENATOR PLUMB.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, I esteem myself particularly unfortunate in that before I have been a member of this body long enough to have become familiar with even the dimensions of the Chamber in which we sit I am called upon to announce the death of my distinguished colleague, upon whose wonderful resources I had expected largely to rely.

Preston B. Plumb, a Senator from Kansas, died in this city yesterday at 10 minutes before 12 o'clock.

This is not the time nor the occasion to speak at length of the life and public services of the absent Senator. The dark drapery about the seat he so long occupied forcibly reminds his fellow members that they have lost one of their most active and industrious workers. His experience, his practical way of doing things, his sagacity, and his great powers of endurance, his constancy and faithfulness on duty, and his alertness in action, made him a conspicuous figure among the strong men of the nation.

But there are others who feel this bereavement more keenly than we, upon whom the blow has fallen with crushing weight. There is a home where this man was known as the world knew him not, a place where hearts are lacerated and bleeding, where a loving family will be glad, even in their grief, to receive at our hands what is left of the fond husband and father in whose life theirs were closely bound. To them there are at least two sources of consolation—one, that he fell while on duty at his post in the service of his country; the other, that there is a fountain of strength infinite in power and duration from which we all may draw in time of need.

At the proper time I will ask the Senate to name a day when we may pay tribute to our deceased brother in an appropriate manner.

And now, Mr. President, I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk and ask their adoption.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the sudden death of the Hon. Preston B. Plumb causes profound sorrow and deep regret to his associates in the Senate.

Resolved, That a committee of five Senators be appointed by the Vice-President to take order, with a committee of the House of Representatives, for superintending the funeral of the late Senator Plumb, and as a mark of respect for his memory that his body be removed from the capital to the State of Kansas in charge of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and attended by said committee, who shall have full power to carry this resolution into effect.

Resolved, That the Senate will, at 1 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m. to-day, attend in its Chamber the exercises incident to his funeral, and that these resolutions be communicated to the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The resolutions were agreed to unanimously; and the Vice-President appointed as the committee to represent the Senate under the second resolution, Messrs. PEFFER, DOLPH, PADDOCK, GORDON, and PALMER.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, I present a resolution and ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that it be now considered, and that the rule requiring that resolutions of this character shall be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate may be suspended for the purpose of considering it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, from the contingent fund of the Senate, the necessary expenses of the funeral of Hon. Preston B. Plumb, of Kansas, upon vouchers to be approved by the committee appointed to take charge of the funeral arrangements.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

RECESS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate take a recess until 1 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 1 o'clock p. m.

FUNERAL OF SENATOR PLUMB.

The Senate reassembled at 1 o'clock p. m.

At 20 minutes past 1 o'clock the members of the House of Representatives, preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms and Chief Clerk, and headed by the Speaker, entered the Senate Chamber. The Speaker was escorted to a seat at the right of the Vice-President, the Chief Clerk at the Secretary's desk, and the Sergeant-at-Arms on the right of the Vice-President's desk, and the members of the House were escorted to the seats on the floor provided for them.

They were soon followed by the Major-General commanding the Army, the diplomatic corps, the Chief Justice and associate justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, and the President and his Cabinet ministers, who were respectively escorted to the seats assigned them on the floor of the Senate Chamber.

At 1 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m. the casket containing the remains of the deceased Senator was brought into the Senate Chamber, preceded by the Chaplain of the Senate, and escorted by the committee of arrangements of the two Houses and pallbearers selected from the Capitol police.

The burial service of the Lutheran Church was read by the Chaplain, after which he read the poem entitled "Oh, To Be Ready," and offered the following prayer:

Let us pray. O Thou God of our life, we thank Thee that to-day we stand at the empty tomb. We bless Thee for a risen Saviour, for a reigning Lord, for a kingdom that shall survive death. We pray that this kingdom may be established in us and through us, and that grace may be given us so to walk in the obedience and love of God, in the faith of Christ, that we may be prepared to meet the last enemy and to fall asleep sweetly in Jesus.

We rejoice in Thee, O God, our covenant God, to whom we can come in every time of need. The strong and the true and the noble man has fallen. We bless Thee for a record of a faithful, useful life of service, and we thank Thee for the hope that gathers around the casket and the grave.

We commend to Thee very tenderly, O Lord, the stricken household to-day. Fulfill to Thine handmaiden and to these fatherless children all the precious promises of Thy Word, and cause even this dark providence to work together for their good.

We stand amid the mysteries of life and of death. We can not understand God. We rejoice that Thou art upon the throne, ruling and overruling, and we pray for grace, as we journey on through life's pilgrim way, meeting every day responsibilities, amid trial and anxiety and care, that the unseen hand may lead us; that the almighty arm may be round about us; that the love of God may fill our hearts, and that the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, may keep us in every time of trial.

Sanctify, we pray Thee, this bereavement to these, Thy servants, and grant, O God, that this great God-fearing Government, represented here to-day with the nations of the world, may ever stand for God and His Christ, for truth and righteousness, and that we may look forward to the triumph of that blessed Saviour who has come, the light of the world. Enlighten the nations and extend to them, we pray Thee, the blessed hope and the glorious faith which we so richly enjoy.

Bless us each one. Guide us by Thy counsel. Sanctify to us all Thy dealings. And we now commend to Thee these, Thy servants, who shall go with this precious dust. We pray Thee preserve them from accident and from all danger upon their journey and bring them again in peace. We ask these mercies, with forgiveness and grace, in the name of Christ, our Saviour. Amen.

The Chaplain then read from the service of the church at the grave, after which he read the poem entitled "Nearer Home," and pronounced the benediction.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Sergeant-at-Arms, under the direction of the committee, will execute the order of the Senate and escort the remains of the late Senator Plumb to his home in Kansas.

The casket was borne from the Chamber, and the Senate as a body attended the remains to the station.

The Senate returned to its Chamber at 2 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m., and the Vice-President resumed the chair.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 22, 1891, at 12 o'clock m.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That 23,000 copies of the eighth report of the United States Civil Service Commission be printed, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, and 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 20,000 copies for the use of the United States Civil Service Commission.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by T. O. TOWLES, its chief clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. Res. 1) to pay the officers and employés of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1891, on the 24th day of said month; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a resolution declaring that when the two Houses adjourn on Wednesday, the 23d day of December, 1891, they stand adjourned until Tuesday, January 5, 1892; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. Melbourne H. Ford, late a Representative from the State of Michigan, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

ADDITIONAL SESSION EMPLOYÉS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms is directed to employ during the present session, in addition to the existing force, one messenger, acting as assistant doorkeeper, at the rate of $1,800 per annum; four messengers, at the rate of $1,440 per annum each; one engineer, at the rate of $1,200 per annum; three firemen, at the rate of $800 per annum each; two conductors of elevators, at the rate of $800 per annum each; one watchman, at the rate of $900 per annum; ten additional messengers, at the rate of $720 per annum each; one attendant in ladies' retiring room, Senate wing of the Capitol, at the rate of $720 per annum; said employés to be paid from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has that resolution been referred to any committee?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has been referred and reported back.

Mr. MANDERSON. The resolution was referred originally to the Committee on Rules, and I may say in the absence of the chairman of that committee that it received their careful consideration. The committee went to the piece of property which has been acquired by the Senate, in which are several committee rooms and in which many Senators have their working rooms, and after very careful consideration decided that this is the least force with which it would be possible to take care of that property during the session of the Senate. The resolution has also, under the rules, been referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and has received their consideration and approval. It applies during the session of Congress, and it has seemed, to the Committee on Rules at least, that this is a necessary force to attend to the absolute needs of the Senate.

Mr. PLATT. This resolution was reported by the acting chairman of the Committee on Contingent Expenses of the Senate, Mr. PADDOCK, who is now absent on a sad duty by the direction of the Senate. When it came up I asked that it lie over in order that I might look at it, feeling that I dislike very much to add to the official force of the Senate. When I came to see what the resolution is and where the employés are to serve, I discovered that if we are to utilize the Maltby House for the use of the Senate it is necessary to have these officers. I am very sorry that we ever bought the Maltby House. I was opposed to it myself at the time it was bought; but we have it, and there are committee rooms there, and I feel constrained, on the ground of necessity, to withdraw any objection that I made to the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

SCHOONER NANCY—FRENCH SPOLIATION CLAIM.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting the conclusions of fact and law filed by the court under the act of January 20, 1885, in the French spoliation claim in the matter of the schooner Nancy, Nathaniel Lincoln, master; which was read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To what committee shall the communication be referred?

Mr. COCKRELL. There have been several reports from the Court of Claims in regard to those French spoliation claims, and I believe they have been referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I think they should properly go to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HALE. What are those?

Mr. COCKRELL. The findings of the Court of Claims on French spoliation claims. I think they properly ought to go to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HALE. They have always been treated on the deficiency appropriation bill as coming direct from the court, and have been incorporated in the deficiency appropriation bill by vote of the Senate at least half a dozen times.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator will allow me, I introduced the bill providing for the enlargement of the old law and for the extension of the time for the filing of claims. I think the communication clearly ought to go to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HALE. If this report has nothing more in it than adjudicated claims, it ought to go to the Committee on Appropriations, which has always considered them; but it ought to go to the other committee if it relates to a matter that is to receive legislation.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the report be again read.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will state that it is a report from the Court of Claims on one of the many claims presented under the original law referring claims. If this is to be the rule, if a claim which has been referred to the Court of Claims to find the facts and report them is to go the Appropriations Committee, then every claim that is referred there from the Committee on Military Affairs, the Committee on Claims, or any other committee, where the court finds that a certain amount is due, must also go to the Appropriations Committee, and that committee will be the dumping ground for all claims which have been referred to the Court of Claims. This should go to the Committee on Claims. If they choose subsequently to have it referred to the Committee on Appropriations, it will then be properly before that committee, but the Committee on Appropriations ought not to be the reservoir for the reference of all claims which have gone to the Court of Claims in which a finding of fact has been made.

Mr. HALE. There is nothing new in this being sent to the Committee on Appropriations. The Committee on Claims had its jurisdiction originally in the matter and framed the legislation that was adopted by Congress, under which all these claims were sent to the Court of Claims, and from that time the Committee on Claims has asserted no jurisdiction whatever over the question of appropriation.

The court here certifies its judgment as it does in other cases, and it is the habit of the Committee on Appropriations, when it reaches the deficiency appropriation bill, to take up, put in order, arrange, and provide the money to carry out the judgments. The Committee on Claims has nothing further to do with these cases because they have been referred to the court under previous legislation and have been adjudicated by the court. It is simply a question whether the money shall be appropriated.

Mr. MITCHELL. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does the Senator from Maine understand that the findings in these cases of the Court of Claims are conclusive?

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly. That whole matter was fought out in the last Congress, and Congress adopted that view by appropriating to pay the claims so far as then presented.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to ask the Senator if this is a very different case from the references under what is called the Bowman act?

Mr. HALE. Entirely different.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is it not the same kind of case?

Mr. HALE. It is not, and has never been so considered.

Mr. DAWES. I inquire whether there was not special jurisdiction conferred by a special act of Congress upon the Court of Claims to decide upon the merits of these claims?

Mr. HALE. I have just stated that, Mr. President.

Mr. DAWES. I think the course prescribed has been followed.

Mr. HALE. It has been followed, and in the last Congress the whole matter was considered by both branches of the National Legislature, and the policy of paying these claims as they were certified by the court was adopted by that Congress, and on the deficiency bill was an appropriation of several hundred thousand dollars. So the controversy was considered, I supposed, as ended. The Court of Claims from time to time consider these cases and decide upon their validity, as the original act reported from the Committee on Claims provided that they should do. The only question now is the appropriation of the money. I do not see why these cases should not take the course that they have taken invariably heretofore and go to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MITCHELL. Of course the Committee on Claims is not very anxious to have jurisdiction of these cases, but I fail to see the difference between this claim and the class of claims which go to the Court of Claims under what is known as the Bowman act. It has been the universal practice of the Senate to have the cases which have been referred to the Court of Claims under the Bowman act and certified back referred to the Committee on Claims for investigation.

Mr. COCKRELL. That has been the universal rule.

Mr. MITCHELL. And the records of that committee will show that in a great number of cases the committee, and the Senate following the action of the committee, have failed to adopt the conclusions of the Court of Claims under the Bowman act.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator whether, since the original special act passed by Congress, the Committee on Claims has ever had any of these cases sent to it? Have they not all invariably gone to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. COCKRELL. No; I say not.

Mr. MITCHELL. Oh, no.

Mr. COCKRELL. The records will show, if the Senator from Maine will permit me, for I know he wants to be accurate, that for a long time such cases went to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HALE. Not after the court began to report its findings to Congress.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; after the court began to make and report its findings. That is my understanding, and I think the record will show it.

Mr. HALE. If that was done, it was done by accident in some particular cases, and they were sent at once by the Committee on Claims to the Committee on Appropriations, because the Committee on Appropriations have always considered them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What disposition shall be made of the communication?

Mr. ALLISON. Before this question passes from the consideration of the Senate I desire to say that while I have no particular objection to this special matter going to the Committee on Appropriations, I wish to call the attention of the Committee on Claims or the Committee on the Judiciary to the imperfect condition of the legislation respecting these claims. These claims have been sent, I think, for two or three years at least, to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is true. They have been sent there ever since the Committee on Appropriations took jurisdiction and put them on the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. We have given consideration to these claims, have rejected a number of them, and not appropriated money for them, and conspicuously so in the cases of these old insurance companies. Under the original act, which I have been trying to lay my hand on, but can not for the moment, the Court of Claims are not required to state whether or not these claims should be paid. They simply state the facts and the law respecting them. I do not believe, for one, that the Government of the United States is under any obligation to pay these insurance claims; and in reporting the claims last year the committee excluded every claim of that character, as I think they should exclude some other claims that are reported year by year from the Court of Claims. I think, therefore, it would be wise for the Committee on the Judiciary or some other committee of this body to examine these claims and the law respecting them as well as the reports or the findings of the court in regard to them in order that they may be sifted in some way, as surely we are not bound under that law to pass upon and appropriate money for every claim that may be reported here by the Court of Claims.

I desire to say this much in respect to these claims, because I do not wish to consider myself bound as one member of the Committee on Appropriations to appropriate money to pay these claims simply because they have been adjudicated by the Court of Claims.

Mr. MITCHELL. I agree entirely with what the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has said. I think this is nothing more nor less than a claim, coming here certified by the Court of Claims under a law authorizing that court to file and certify as to certain amounts. There is nothing at all in that certification which carries with it any conclusiveness in regard to the duty of Congress to make an appropriation.

It seems to me that it belongs to precisely the same class of claims as those which are referred to that court under the Bowman act; and when they come back here from the Court of Claims they come simply as claims, not for an appropriation as a matter of course, but for consideration by some appropriate committee for the purpose of ascertaining whether in view of all that has been done and all the facts surrounding the case the claim ought or ought not to be paid. That being so, it seems to me that the Committee on Claims is the proper committee to take jurisdiction of the case and investigate and report upon it.

This is all I desire to say. I simply wish the practice of the Senate to be settled properly.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to call attention to the act of January 20, 1885, referring the French spoliation claims to the Court of Claims:

SEC. 6. That on the first Monday of December in each year the court shall report to Congress, for final action, the facts found by it, and its conclusions in all cases which it has disposed of and not previously reported. Such finding and report of the court shall be taken to be merely advisory as to the law and facts found, and shall not conclude either the claimant or Congress; and all claims not finally presented to said court within the period of two years limited by this act shall be forever barred; and nothing in this act shall be construed as committing the United States to the payment of any such claims.

As I said, these claims, I think, were referred to the Committee on Claims and they were there considered, and nobody pretended to claim that such a finding was a judgment of the Court of Claims. It is farcical to make such a claim under that law. It is no judgment; it is simply what the law authorized to be a finding. The claims were referred to the Committee on Claims, and my recollection is that the Committee on Claims once or twice favorably reported some of the claims and recommended that they be put on an appropriation bill, and they were put on a deficiency appropriation bill. There was a contest here for years between the Senate and the other House as to whether they should be paid, and finally a portion of them was paid at the last session on a deficiency appropriation bill; and the Committee on Claims had to pass upon which claims should be paid, and that committee excluded a considerable portion of them.

Now, is it fair that the Committee on Appropriations shall be turned into that kind of an investigating committee to determine which one of these claims ought to be paid? Why, Mr. President, we hear Senators all through the session complaining of the absorption of all the business of the Senate by the Committee on Appropriations, and now Senators are trying to force into that committee the consideration of nearly all the private claims that will come before us.

This is no more a judgment than is a finding under the Bowman law, so called. It has no more force and effect. It is a finding of the facts and the amounts, and that is all it is, and they all go to the Committee on Claims. The Committee on Claims ought to take jurisdiction of these claims and it ought to determine what classes of them shall be paid. Then it is competent for the Committee on Claims to report either for the passage of a special bill, as they do under the Bowman act and as they did under the old 4th of July claims law, or to report and refer to the Committee on Appropriations an amendment to some appropriation bill. Under the rules of the Senate that might bring it within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations, and that is all that in my judgment will so bring it. It is a dangerous precedent to refer this claim to the Committee on Appropriations. We might as well now start out right in referring these claims to the proper committee and let that committee take jurisdiction of them and determine which of them shall be paid and which shall not be paid.

I for one protest against these claims going to the Committee on Appropriations. Let them go to the Committee on Claims.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What reference shall be made of the communication? It will be referred to the Committee on Claims if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

Mr. HALE subsequently said: What was done with the communication relating to a French spoliation claim?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was referred to the Committee on Claims. The Chair announced that it would be referred to that committee in the absence of objection, and he heard no objection.

Mr. HALE. I did not hear the Chair. I was only going to say that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] informs me that at the last session the Committee on Claims considered a portion of these claims and reported and referred them to the Committee on Appropriations, and on that information I shall make no further objection.

PAY OF EMPLOYÉS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a joint resolution from the House of Representatives.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 1) to pay the officers and employés of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1891, on the 24th day of said month was read the first time by its title.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution may be passed now by the Senate. It is the usual resolution for the pay of the employés of the two bodies just before the holidays.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was read the second time at length, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Wednesday, the 23d day of December, 1891, they stand adjourned until Tuesday, January 5, 1892.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that that resolution may now be concurred in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the resolution is before the Senate. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE FORD.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I ask that the resolutions of the House of Representatives relative to the death of my late colleague in that House, Hon. Melbourne H. Ford, be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolutions of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Whereas the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. Melbourne H. Ford, late a Representative from the State of Michigan: Therefore,

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to his memory the House do now adjourn.

Resolved, That the Clerk be directed to communicate this action to the Senate.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Mr. President, I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk and ask for their adoption. I give notice that I shall on some suitable occasion in the future ask the Senate to pause in its business to pay fitting tribute to the life and public services of my late colleague.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions submitted by the Senator from Michigan will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. Melbourne H. Ford, late a Representative from the State of Michigan.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate this resolution to the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The resolutions were agreed to unanimously.

Mr. MCMILLAN. As a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 23, 1891, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, December 23, 1891.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Vice-President being absent, the President pro tempore took the chair.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a memorial of the president of the municipal consolidation inquiry commission of New York, remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill 846, to authorize and regulate the construction of bridges across the Hudson River and East River at the city of New York; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present three petitions, all printed on the blanks sent out by the representatives of Savannah, Ga., entitled "Georgia's appeal to her sister States." The blanks for these petitions have been filled in by the directors of the Board of Trade of St. Joseph, Mo., the mayor and aldermen of the city of St. Joseph, Mo., in council assembled, and the Commercial Club of Kansas City, Mo., in regular meeting assembled, indorsing the movement (which seems to be quite extensive from the number of blanks sent out of Georgia) for securing Congressional appropriations for deep water at Savannah. I move that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL presented a petition of the Synod of Missouri of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, at its session in St. Joseph, Mo., October 23, 1891, signed by the stated clerk, Mr. John H. Miller, of Rich Hill, Mo., praying for the ratification of the treaty known as the Brussels treaty of 1890; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the North Presbyterian Church, representing 300 persons residing in St. Louis, Mo., adopted November 29, 1891, by a vote of 114 to none, and a petition of citizens of Long Branch Congregation of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, representing 130 persons residing in Atchison County, Mo., signed by Rev. D. M. Sharp, pastor, and John H. Walkinshaw, clerk, praying for the closing of the World's Columbian Fair on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. PROCTOR presented the petition of C. H. Bellman and other citizens of Fairfax, Vt., and the petition of C. S. Goodnow and other citizens of Whittingham, Vt., praying for the free delivery of mails in country districts; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Presbytery of St. Johnsbury, Vt., praying for the closing of the World's Columbian Fair on Sunday; for the prevention of the sale of liquors within the exposition grounds, and that the art department be managed according to the American standard of purity; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. CALL presented a petition of the Key West (Fla.) Board of Trade, praying for an increase of the appropriation made by Congress for the improvement of the northwest channel to Key West; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 417) to prohibit monopoly in the transportation of cattle to foreign countries, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Select Committee on the Transportation and Sale of Meat Products; which was agreed to.

PRINTING OF REPORT ON MARITIME CANAL OF NICARAGUA.

Mr. MORGAN. By direction of the Committee on Foreign Relations I report a resolution, and ask its reference to the Committee on Printing.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 15,000 copies of the report and appendix No. 1944 of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, to accompany Senate bill No. 4827, to amend the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua," approved February 20, 1889; which report was made to the Fifty-first Congress, 10,000 copies of such reprint to be for the use of the House of Representatives and 5,000 for the use of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suggest that the number of the bill be left blank, as I propose to introduce such a bill, which will have a different number from the one of the last Congress.

Mr. MORGAN. The resolution identifies the bill to which the report was an accompaniment; that is all. It merely identifies the report.

Mr. SHERMAN. But I should like to have the new bill substituted for the old. It would make no difference to just leave the blank for the number until after I introduce the new bill.

Mr. MORGAN. But the Senator will bear in mind that it is a mere description of the report. It is report so and so, to accompany a bill so and so, in the Fifty-first Congress.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator prefers to let the resolution stand as it is, I have no objection,

Mr. MORGAN. It is merely intended to identify the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 1218) to amend the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua," approved February 20, 1889; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1219) for the relief of Fred. W. Snell; which was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it should go to the Committee on Military Affairs. It is a claim for compensation for a horse lost in the war.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The attention of the Chair has been called to the fact that the former reference of the bill was to the Committee on Claims, and that that committee has usually had charge of that class of claims.

Mr. SHERMAN. All right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 1220) granting a pension to Eliza K. Starr; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 1221) authorizing the purchase of the Hubert H. Bancroft library, a collection of historical information concerning the western half of America; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1222) to protect the wages of seamen; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1223) to amend section 4153, Revised Statutes, defining register tonnage, to provide for the supervision of vessel measurement, and to insure accuracy in the computation of tonnage; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1224) to amend the law relative to the shipment, payment, and discharge of seamen; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1225) to regulate the changing of the names of vessels; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1226) to increase the safety of life and property on ships at sea by establishing rules for freeboard or load marks; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. FRYE. This last bill is an exceedingly important one, and I hope that the boards of trade, maritime associations, shipowners, and shipbuilders will send to the Committee on Commerce any criticisms they may have to make in relation to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HARRIS (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1227) authorizing the Postmaster-General to adopt devices for canceling postage stamps, stamped envelopes, stamped wrappers, and postal cards, to prevent peculations and fraud; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. GIBSON of Louisiana introduced a bill (S. 1228) for the improvement of the harbor of the city of New Orleans, La., with an appropriation therefor; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PROCTOR (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1229) amending section 1202 of Revised Statutes of the United States, providing for the attendance of witnesses before a court-martial; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1230) amending the act of October 1, 1890, entitled "An act to provide for the examination of certain officers of the Army and to regulate promotions therein;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1231) for the relief of Charles F. Sanborn, St. Albans, Vt.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1232) removing charge of desertion against Lucius W. Hayford, Worcester, Vt.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1233) to establish a military post on the line of railway between Burlington and Highgate, Vt.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 23, 1891.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. The Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Eternal God! The shadow feared by men has entered the Capitol and enfolded in his dark shroud the form of a brave, honest, and honorable Senator, steadfast in friendship, loyal to his convictions; zealous, fearless, and faithful in the fulfillment of every trust, public and private, and the song of joy and gladness that was rising to our lips, the song belonging to this happy season, is hushed as we hear the wail of a whole people from the broad plains of Kansas, joining with the sobs of the wife that has been widowed and of the children that are made fatherless, as they sit shrouded in their home of grief. And to-day the tolling bell knells the passing of the soul of a leader and a friend of the people.

And yet we bless Thee, O Father, notwithstanding the darkness that has fallen upon the capital and upon his State and the whole country, that in the light that shone upon the plains of Bethlehem there was a promise of the glory of resurrection day, and that Christmas unites itself with Easter, and that death is not victorious nor the conqueror of human life, but that Christ, born of the Virgin and cradled in the manger, hath opened the door of everlasting life and glory to all who are faithful to their trusts and who walk in Thy fear and Thy favor. And so we lift our song to Thee, even from near the open grave: Glory be to God on high, and on earth peace, good-will to men, through the august and sacred name of Jesus Christ, our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

ASSIGNMENT OF COMMITTEE CLERKS.

Mr. RUSK. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution and ask immediate consideration of the same.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, after which the Chair will make a statement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Accounts is hereby authorized and directed to designate the committees of the House to which the clerks provided for by the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1892, should be allowed and assigned for the present Congress, and to report by resolution to the House for its action thereon.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the House that on Saturday last an agreement was made that no business should be transacted to-day other than that relating to the adjournment resolution, the swearing in of new members, and the appointment of committees. This is a resolution relating to the assignment of the committee clerks, and the Chair is in some doubt whether it should be considered at this time, in view of the agreement heretofore made, although, as a matter of convenience, it would undoubtedly be better that the committee should proceed to make these assignments without delay.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. We could not hear whether this resolution was for reference to the committee or one authorizing immediate action.

The SPEAKER. This is the usual resolution directing the Committee on Accounts to assign to the committees the clerks provided for by the last legislative appropriation bill. There are certain committees, the House will remember, which are not provided with clerks. Only a given number of committees are so provided, and the Committee on Accounts makes the assignment of clerks to the various committees.

Mr. RUSK. I will ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. I object.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I think we ought to carry out the original agreement.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

DEATH OF HON. WILLIAM H. F. LEE.

Mr. MEREDITH. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make the painful announcement to the House of the death of Hon. William H. F. Lee, a Representative in the Fiftieth and Fifty-first Congresses of the United States and a Representative elect to the Fifty-second Congress.

He died at his home in Fairfax County on the 15th day of October last, after a lingering illness. Later in the session I shall ask this House to fix a day when his colleagues and friends can do justice to his memory and express their appreciation of his high character.

It is only meet and fitting on this occasion that I should say that in the death of Gen. Lee the State of Virginia has lost the services of one of her most chivalrous and noble sons, and the district he so well represented a faithful guardian of the interests of all its people.

I send to the desk and ask the adoption of these resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with deep regret and profound sorrow of the death of Hon. W. H. F. Lee, a Representative from the State of Virginia.

Resolved, That the Clerk be directed to communicate a copy of these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the House do now adjourn.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

And accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Tuesday, the 5th day of January next.

AID TO RUSSIAN SUFFERERS.

Mr. WASHBURN. I introduce a joint resolution, and ask for the present consideration of the same.

The joint resolution (S. R. 21) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to transport contributions for the relief of the suffering poor of Russia was read the first time by its title.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the joint resolution be read for information.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ any ship or vessel belonging to the Navy of the United States best adapted for such service, for the purpose of transporting to the inhabitants of those provinces of Russia now suffering from want of food, owing to the failure of crops, such contributions as may be made by citizens of the United States for their relief, and, if necessary, to charter and employ, under the authority of the United States, a suitable steamship or ships for the same purpose. Any sum of money which may be necessary to carry out the object of this resolution is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. WASHBURN. I wish to state that a movement was inaugurated some two or three weeks since in my section of country, looking to making contributions of breadstuffs to the suffering people of Russia. A very large amount of flour, especially in my own city and in that region, has been contributed, or pledged for that purpose. Just before the holidays I made application to the Secretary of the Navy, asking that a Government ship be detailed to transport this flour to some Russian port. As Senators may have seen in the papers, he assented, and has arranged for the Constellation, a Government sailing ship, to take the first cargo. It now appears, however, that the Constellation will not be able to take more than one-fourth or one-fifth of the contributions already in sight, and it seemed to me a very proper and a very graceful thing for Congress to do now what it did in 1880, when the Constellation bore food to the suffering people of Ireland. It is with that view that I have introduced the joint resolution, and I will state that it is very important that it should have immediate action, because time is pressing.

I desire to say, further, that the railroad lines and all the great transportation companies of this country have agreed to carry these breadstuffs without any charge, the lightering associations in New York have agreed to put the supplies on the ships, and this joint resolution will simply make the proper complement of the whole affair, as our American people are not in the habit of doing things by halves.

So I introduce the joint resolution at present, and I desire, in order that the Senate may fully understand the situation, to have read a telegram which I have just received from the gentleman who has had charge of this great work, showing what the requirements are likely to be.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The telegram will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., January 4.

Hon. W. D. WASHBURN,
Washington, D. C., 2111 Massachusetts Avenue:

Amount already pledged about 1,000,750 pounds flour. Expect to receive total of 6,000,000 pounds. Millers and flour men are the contributors, and are located in Iowa, Indiana, Illinois, Kansas, Kentucky, Maryland, District of Columbia, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, New York, North Dakota, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Texas, Virginia, Wisconsin. For further particulars see Northwestern Miller. We greatly need steamship to carry this. Constellation can not do the work.

W. C. EDGAR.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I shall not object to the present consideration of the joint resolution. It is a charity that is bound to command the respect of all intelligent and charitable people. But believing as I do, that I as a Senator have no right to tax the people to put money in the Treasury and appropriate it to this or any other charity, I shall feel bound to vote against the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I notice that the joint resolution makes an indefinite appropriation. I suggest to the Senator who has introduced it that it is a very bad practice, although one I know which has grown up in the last year or two, to make indefinite appropriations, and the result is almost to bankrupt the Treasury of the United States. I think the practice ought not to be followed now, even in a matter of charity, and I suggest that if the Senator from Minnesota has any information as to the probable cost, some specific amount should be appropriated, say not to exceed $100,000, or whatever amount is necessary.

Mr. WASHBURN. The same idea occurred to me in drawing the joint resolution. I supposed it was the custom to fix some sum, as the Senator has suggested; but upon looking at the resolution passed in 1880 I found that there was no limitation. I accede cheerfully to the suggestion, and would name $100,000—not to exceed $100,000.

Mr. BUTLER. "Or so much thereof as may be necessary."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate will receive a message from the President of the United States.

Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of the secretaries of the President of the United States, communicated to the Senate sundry messages in writing.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] observed that the practice of making indefinite appropriations is one that has grown up recently. I think if the Senator will examine the precedents he will find that indefinite appropriations have existed for a long time. I suppose the Senator refers more especially to what are denominated permanent appropriations when he speaks of indefinite appropriations. Certainly an indefinite appropriation of the character indicated here will not very greatly disturb the Treasury.

I had some conversation with the Secretary of the Navy respecting the cost of chartering these vessels, in view of the fact that the governor of my own State issued a proclamation to the people of the State of Iowa asking them to make contributions to the sufferers in Russia and appointed a committee of the most eminent men in our State, who are now gathering contributions of corn, wheat, flour, etc. It seemed to me apparent that the vessel which the Secretary of the Navy offered, namely, the Constellation, would not be sufficient. In my judgment it is not suitable to the work in hand, even though it could carry five or six thousand barrels of flour to some Russian port. Therefore I think true economy will require that a vessel or vessels shall be chartered, if the Government is to bear the expense.

The total cost of a single vessel, the ordinary sailing vessel that would be chartered to do the work, as the Secretary of the Navy informed me, at least in his judgment, would not exceed $25,000. I think $100,000 will probably charter three or four cargoes, and I am very glad the Senator from Minnesota has agreed to limit the joint resolution. I think that is a wise thing to do, and I shall favor the measure as it is now proposed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has just now received a message from the President of the United States bearing upon the question under consideration, which will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The famine prevailing in some of the provinces of Russia is so severe and widespread as to have attracted the sympathetic interest of a large number of our liberal and favored people. In some of the great grain-producing States of the West movements have already been organized to collect flour and meal for the relief of these perishing Russian families, and the response has been such as to justify the belief that a ship's cargo can very soon be delivered at the seaboard, through the generous coöperation of the transportation lines. It is most appropriate that a people whose storehouses have been so lavishly filled with all the fruits of the earth by the gracious favor of God should manifest their gratitude by large gifts to His suffering children in other lands.

The Secretary of the Navy has no steam vessel at his disposal that could be used for the transportation of these supplies, and I therefore recommend that he be authorized to charter a suitable vessel to receive them, if a sufficient amount should be offered, and to send them under the charge of a naval officer to such Russian port as may be most convenient for ready distribution to those most in need.

BENJ. HARRISON.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 5, 1892.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the words "which may be necessary," and insert "not to exceed $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary;" so as to read:

Any sum of money not to exceed $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the object of this resolution, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. HARRIS. My own may be the only vote against it, but I want the yeas and nays, so as to record that vote against the passage of the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the joint resolution pass? on which the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOAR. Before the yeas and nays are called, I suggest that there be an order that the President's message be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered in the absence of objection. The Secretary will proceed to call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CARLISLE (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK], whom I do not see in his seat at this time. If he were present, I should vote "nay." I do not know how he would vote.

Mr. WALTHALL (when Mr. GEORGE'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. GEORGE] is absent by leave of the Senate. I understood from my colleague that he was paired generally with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. DOLPH. That is so. If the Senator from Mississippi supposes that his colleague would like me to observe the pair on this question, I will withdraw my vote and announce my pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. I did not observe at the moment that the Senator was not in the Senate Chamber.

Mr. WALTHALL. I have no preference about it. I simply announce the fact that my colleague is paired with the Senator.

Mr DOLPH. I withdraw my vote and announce my pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER]. Were he present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], who is detained from the Senate by illness. I understand, however, that if he were present he would vote "yea," and I will therefore also vote "yea."

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], and my colleague [Mr. PADDOCK] is paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE], as that Senator has already announced. I suggest to him that we exchange pairs and both vote, leaving my colleague paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. I ask the Senator from Texas if he has any objection to changing the pairs so that my colleague shall stand paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] and the Senator from Texas and I will both be privileged to vote.

Mr. COKE. No, I have no objection. I vote "nay."

Mr. MANDERSON. I vote "yea."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON].

Mr. WILSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. I do not observe that he is in his seat, and I therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote for the joint resolution.

Mr. DAVIS. I have a general pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], and therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CASEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO], but as I understand that he, if present, would vote "yea," I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 9; as follows:

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. VEST submitted the following order; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Ordered, That the papers on file in the Pension Bureau of the Interior Department relative to the pension claim numbered 711,850, of Obe Sutherland, late a teamster in the Quartermaster's Department of the United States Volunteer Army, be transmitted to the Committee on Pensions of the Senate.

COINAGE OF SILVER BULLION.

Mr. STEWART. I offer a resolution for reference to the Committee on the Judiciary, and I ask that it be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas by the fourteenth section of the act approved January 18, 1837, it is provided "That gold and silver bullion brought to the mint for coinage, shall be received and coined, by the proper officers, for the benefit of the depositor;" and

Whereas by the act approved February 28, 1878, entitled "An act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar, and to restore its legal-tender character," it is enacted "That there shall be coined, at the several mints of the United States, silver dollars of the weight of 412½ grains, Troy, of standard silver, as provided in the act of January 18, 1837, on which shall be the devices and superscriptions provided in said act:" Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and it is hereby, instructed to inquire if any further legislation is necessary to make it the duty of the proper officers of the mint to receive and coin silver bullion for the benefit of depositors.

Mr. STEWART. I desire to have the resolution referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and I call the attention of the committee to a fact which seems to have been overlooked, that the act of 1878, known as the Bland act, revived the act of 1837 so far as relates to the coinage of silver and gold. The act of 1837 provides that it shall be the duty of the proper officers of the mint to coin silver bullion deposited for the benefit of depositors. The act of 1878, the Bland act, makes it the duty of the Department to coin silver as provided in the former act. I have looked in vain to find any clause qualifying the direct command found in the first section of the Bland act. It seems to have been overlooked, and in fact I had overlooked it until my attention was called to it by a lawyer from Ohio, Mr. Stark. I have since spent some days investigating the matter, and I have come clearly to the conclusion that the act of 1837, so far as the coinage of silver bullion is concerned, is revived by the express language of the act of 1878. The subsequent provision of the act providing for the purchase and coinage of silver is simply an addition to it, abstracting nothing, and as it occurred just previous to the resumption of specie payment it may be well said that at that time it was thought important to accumulate bullion for the purpose of coinage in addition to what might be deposited. At all events, I do not see that there is anything in the act or in any other act which seems to limit or qualify the direct command in the first section, and I hope that the Judiciary Committee will give the matter an early and careful consideration.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Nevada, in connection with this matter, whether he thinks the act of 1890 has any effect upon the import of the act of 1878?

Mr. STEWART. None whatever. The act of June, 1890, simply deals with the purchase of bullion and repeals the clause that required the purchase of not less than $2,000,000 nor more than $4,000,000 worth of silver bullion per month, and substitutes therefor other arrangements for purchasing a larger amount and issuing Treasury notes therefor. But it does not deal with the remainder of the act at all.

Mr. ALLISON. I only made the suggestion in view of the fact that the resolution does not allude to the act of 1890, and it might be incomplete unless it also covered the effect of the act of 1890.

Mr. VEST. What is the language of the act of 1890?

Mr. STEWART. The act of 1890 repeals the clause which authorizes or requires the purchase of not less than $2,000,000 nor more than $4,000,000 worth per month and substitutes other provisions by way of purchase. It leaves the remainder of the act as it stood before. The act of 1890 has nothing to do with the coinage except the particular clause referred to. The act of 1878 is still in force, as I understand it; and if there is any statute that modifies the direct revival of the act of 1837 by the first section of the act of 1878 I have been unable to find it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON MEAT PRODUCTS.

Mr. VEST. I should like to submit a question about which I have some doubt, in regard to a special committee of the Senate. Immediately before the recess I introduced a bill in regard to monopoly in the transportation of cattle to foreign countries, which had been introduced during the last session, referred to the Select Committee on the Transportation and Sale of Meat Products, reported back by that committee, and passed by the Senate, but failed of passage in the House of Representatives. As the committees had not been reëstablished at the time I introduced the bill at this session I did not have it referred to the same committee, of which I was chairman, for the reason that by the resolution of the Senate in regard to that committee passed at the last Congress the committee was continued until the first day of this session with instruction to report at that time. My construction of that resolution was and is now that until further action by the Senate continuing the existence of the committee it could not transact business, but remained in that condition, whatever it might be described.

Whilst absent from the Senate on account of sickness the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, reported back the bill to the Senate with the request that it be sent to the Select Committee on the Transportation and Sale of Meat Products, and on my return I find the bill referred to that committee. Now, the inquiry which has arisen in my mind, and which I submit (and I am glad to see the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] in his seat, who is chairman of the committee on the Republican side to fix the committees), is, does the action of the Senate based upon the report of the joint committee appointed by the Republican and Democratic parties here naming the special committees continue their existence without further action by the Senate?

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to interrupt him a moment, I had thought, and I think every member with whom I have had any conversation on the subject came to the same conclusion, that the resolution submitted to the Senate providing for the establishment of certain committees and naming the members of the committees would undoubtedly establish the existence of a committee for the present Congress. I think that that must be the case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read, for the information of the Senate, an extract from the Journal of March 3, last.

Mr. HALE. That has been the universal practice.

Mr. CULLOM. Let the resolution be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Journal, March 3,1891:

COMMITTEES OF THE SENATE.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the standing and select committees of the Senate as now constituted be, and they are hereby, continued with power to act until the first Monday in December, 1891, or until their successors are elected.

Mr. CULLOM. Early in the present session I submitted the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the following constitute the select committees of the Senate of the United States for the Fifty-second Congress.

Following the resolution is the provision for the establishment of the Committee on the Transportation and Sale of Meat Products, and Messrs. VEST (chairman), COKE, Plumb, POWER, CASEY were appointed upon that committee by a resolution of the Senate. So it seems to me it is unqualifiedly true that the committee exists by virtue of the action of the Senate itself during the present session.

Mr. VEST. That would be the inference, but I want to put it beyond any doubt.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator will allow me further, the effect of that resolution, it seems to me, just as clearly establishes that committee as if the Senator had introduced a separate resolution providing that it be established in the first instance and that resolution had been adopted by the Senate.

Mr. VEST. During the last Congress this question come up incidentally, and upon consultation with the late chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, Mr. Edmunds, and other very experienced and able lawyers, I came to the conclusion, with reference to this very committee, that a special resolution was necessary, and I offered such a resolution, and it was adopted by the Senate. But that was after the committees had been fixed as they are fixed now and the personnel of membership established.

Mr. HALE. If that was required in the case of each committee, what would be the force of the general resolution which, in terms, constitutes all the committees at once? If each committee must afterwards introduce a special resolution creating it a working committee, what force is there in the general resolution?

Mr. VEST. The only difficulty that arose in my mind was the fact that the Senate by special resolution had declared that this special committee (and I do not speak of any other) should exist until the first day of the present session. That was affirmative and distinct legislation, and to get rid of that affirmative legislation we must adopt the inferential argument, for it is nothing else, that the general resolution repeals or takes the place of the affirmative action of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly if, after the resolution which limited the duration of this committee to the first day of the session, the present Congress had done nothing, the committee would fall, because the limitation of the special resolution was upon the first day of the session. But the Senate has taken up the subject and in connection with other committees has declared by resolution that that committee is revived, and that it exists, with the Senator from Missouri at its head. I do not think the Senator need have any doubt about it.

Mr. VEST. I have not the slightest objection of course to any construction the Senate sees proper to put upon it, but I wanted to put the question as to the condition of the bill beyond any doubt, so that my committee could either act upon it or send it back to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senate had never created that committee by a resolution offered by the Senator from Missouri, the Senate coming in at the beginning of this session and creating a select committee and naming the members of it certainly makes it an existing committee of the Senate for this Congress.

Mr. COCKRELL. Independent of any affirmative action.

Mr. HARRIS. Unquestionably.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. KERR, its Clerk, announced that the House had elected Hon. BENTON MCMILLIN, a Representative from the State of Tennessee, Speaker pro tempore during the absence of the Speaker.

SENATOR FROM KANSAS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented the credentials of Bishop W. Perkins, appointed by the governor of the State of Kansas a Senator from that State, to fill, until the next meeting of the Legislature thereof, the vacancy caused by the death of Preston B. Plumb; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

Mr. PEFFER. I ask that the oath of office be administered to my colleague, Mr. Perkins, who is present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator will please come forward and receive the oath of office.

Mr. Perkins advanced to the Vice-President's desk, escorted by Mr. PEFFER, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him, he took his seat in the Senate.

SENATOR FROM NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Vance], elected to succeed himself, is now present in the Senate Chamber, and I ask that the oath of office may be administered to him.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator elect from North Carolina will please come forward and receive the oath of office.

Mr. Vance advanced to the Vice-President's desk, escorted by Mr. HARRIS, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him, he took his seat in the Senate.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. COCKRELL. In pursuance of the understanding had at the time, and the announcement made by me when the committees were appointed, I am authorized by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] to resign his places on the committees to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, on Finance, on Privileges and Elections, on the District of Columbia, and as chairman of the Committee on Woman Suffrage, and I ask that his colleague [Mr. VANCE], who has just been sworn in, be appointed to those respective places.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The declination of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] to serve upon the committees named will be accepted by the Senate, if there is no objection, and his colleague [Mr. VANCE] will, if there be no objection, be considered as having been appointed to the vacancies thus created.

SILVER COINAGE.

Mr. MORRILL. I propose to-morrow morning, after the close of the morning business, if able, and with the consent of the Senate, to submit some remarks, of which previous notice has been given, on the subject of the free coinage of silver on the bill now upon the table, being (S. 51) to provide for the free coinage of gold and silver bullion, and for other purposes, which was introduced by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART].

COMPILATION OF A. W. CHURCH AND H. H. SMITH.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 500 copies of the "Table showing the contents of the several volumes comprising the Annals of Congress, Congressional Debates, Congressional Globe, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Statutes at Large, and United States Supreme Court Reports, arranged by years and Congresses," which was compiled for the Senate Library by A. W. Church and H. H. Smith; the same being brought down to January 1, 1892.

EXPORT OF CATTLE TO GREAT BRITAIN.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. VEST. If my friend from Iowa will permit me, I desire to ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of a joint resolution in regard to the British quarantine upon American cattle which I introduced just before the recess, and gave notice that I would ask the Senate to consider on the next day, but I was detained by sickness from the Senate. There will be no debate about it, I think. It passed the Senate at the last Congress unanimously and only failed in the House of Representatives for want of time.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the joint resolution be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa withdraw the motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business?

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw it for the time being.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the joint resolution (S. R. 10) in regard to the export trade in cattle, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States be requested to cause correspondence and negotiation to be had through the Department of State, or otherwise, with the authorities of the Kingdom of Great Britain, for the purpose of securing the abrogation or modification of the regulations now enforced by said authorities which require cattle imported into Great Britain from the United States of America to be slaughtered at the port of entry, and prohibiting the same from being carried alive to other places in said kingdom.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. VEST. If the Senate will permit me, I desire to call its attention to this very important resolution for a few moments.

Those members of the Senate who have given any attention to this subject are aware of the fact that under the wise legislation of Congress at the last session, providing for the inspection of all cattle sent from this country to foreign ports, the price of American cattle exported has largely increased, although, on account of this increase in price, the number exported has slightly diminished.

If Senators will turn to page 26 of the report of the Secretary of Agriculture they will find an interesting statement in regard to the number of inspected cattle which have gone from this country in the last year to foreign ports, and it will be seen that all the exports of inspected cattle to other foreign countries than Great Britain are very insignificant. For instance, as the Secretary says, referring to the inspection:

Since the commencement of this work 311,146 cattle and 15,373 sheep have been inspected, as provided by our regulations, up to October 1, 1891, making a total of 326,519 head of animals inspected.

Of these numbers—

	Cattle.	Sheep.
Great Britain received	300,862	13,714
Germany received	4,354
France received	4,336	1,576
Belgium received	1,594
Austria received		42
Cape Colony received		41
Total	311,146	15,373

So it will be seen that outside of our cattle trade with Great Britain we have with the remainder of the world hardly any worthy of consideration.

The Secretary of Agriculture, referring to the quarantine regulations of Great Britain, which form the subject-matter of this resolution, makes a suggestion which becomes of very serious importance at the present time, and is worthy of the immediate consideration of Congress.

These quarantine regulations amount to this, that all cattle exported from the United States to any British port must be slaughtered at the port of entry under the control of British officers, and our live cattle can not be taken into the interior of the British Empire. The result is that the British farmer who desires to feed store cattle, as they are termed in Great Britain, or stock cattle, as they are termed here, is unable to do so because of the quarantine regulation, which requires them to be slaughtered at the ports at which they enter into the Empire. The Secretary of Agriculture, after alluding to this subject, uses the following language, which makes it of special importance at this time:

Unless we can secure from the British Government the removal of the unfriendly restrictions now bearing so hardly upon our cattle trade, I shall feel it to be my duty to suggest the rigid enforcement of the law now in existence prohibiting the import into the United States of all live animals, a law which has only been suspended as a matter of friendship to foreign governments. That we have far more justification for the exclusion from the United States of all animals coming from Great Britain and its dependencies than they have for the interposition of any obstacles to our cattle exports from the United States is shown by the recent report of Prof. Brown, the veterinarian of the British Privy Council, who admits in the plainest manner that no hope exists in that country of ever absolutely suppressing pleuro-pneumonia, and shows, indeed, that such measurable success as he has faint hopes of attaining in the control of it is to be obtained only by methods which are nothing more than those adopted by ourselves, and to which, promptly and vigorously enforced, we owe our present success in the complete control of this disease.

The reason alleged by the British Government for these quarantine relations is that the cattle exported from this country to Great Britain are largely affected by pleuro-pneumonia. The facts show, and they are admitted, that pleuro-pneumonia exists in but two localities in the United States, and the Secretary of Agriculture states that in one of them the disease has been effectually eradicated. One of these localities was in Rhode Island and one in New Jersey; but the district in Rhode Island has been entirely disinfected and the disease exists now only to a limited extent in one district in the State of New Jersey, and the Secretary says that at a very early day the disease will be removed from that locality also.

But, Mr. President, I do not propose to discuss the reasons for the action of the British authorities. I simply want to deprecate the idea that the Government of the United States, before exhausting all amicable remedies, before exhausting all possible means in the way of negotiation and international conference for the proper adjustment of this matter between these two great countries, shall resort to the extraordinary remedy proposed by the Secretary of Agriculture. It is well known that the remedy, as to which he has appeared in the public press, I believe, several times, is the absolute exclusion from this country of all cattle proposed to be imported from Canada. Under the McKinley act we largely increased the import duties upon cattle imported into the United States, but, notwithstanding that increase, the breeds of Canadian cattle which, from climatic causes, are in some respects and for some purposes superior to any we have in this country, are still brought into the United States, largely to the profit of American breeders and producers. If now, without any attempt to adjust this matter with the British authorities, we should pursue the remedy suggested by the Secretary of Agriculture, it would be in the nature of retaliation, and would amount to the destruction of commercial intercourse between Canada and the United States.

Again, Mr. President, it would be unjust, because Canada as to her tariff regulations is absolutely independent of the mother country. British goods coming from the British Empire are put under the same tariff duties when entering Canadian ports as goods from the United States or any other foreign country. It is one of the anomalies of the great British Empire that her colonial possessions are permitted to control their tariff regulations and regulate their tariff duties as they please, and there would be no justice in holding Canada responsible for the action of the British authorities in England and in Ireland. Those regulations are made—I will not say for what purpose, but I think without sufficient cause—by the authorities of the British Empire, not in Canada, but in the home country. There is no complaint whatever of Canadian cattle. On the contrary, speaking for my own people—and I represent a large cattle-producing State—there are breeds of Canadian cattle which come into Missouri and into all the Northwestern cattle-producing States that largely invigorate our own cattle and give a virility to our cattle and stock that could not be obtained elsewhere.

The resolution, Mr. President, is so plain, that it seems to me there can be no objection to it. As I stated before, it passed the Senate at the last session unanimously, and it would have passed the other House but for want of time to consider it.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I do not rise to oppose the resolution. Senators will remember that the subject came up and was discussed somewhat at length in the last Congress. Notwithstanding the discussion, and notwithstanding the protest that at that time was entered against this severe and outright feature of protection under the form of quarantine regulations, it seems that nothing has been done in the way of softening or mitigating these extreme quarantine regulations. Now the Senator objects, and it may be that his objection is tenable, to our retaliating upon Canada in like kind, but the Senator and the Senate should bear in mind, and it would be well if the country should take notice, that here is a marked instance where Great Britain (which is constantly preaching to us homilies upon free trade and is objecting in every possible way against protection as embodied in the statutes of the United States, and is calling down upon the heads of the American people the censure and the vengeance of the civilized world because of the extreme barbarism and unenlightenment of its protective policy) is to-day, under the form of quarantine regulations upon this great and increasing exportation of live animals from the United States into that country, enacting a complete prohibitory tariff. In fact, no live stock from America, cattle or sheep, can be introduced into Great Britain to compete with the products of the farmer of Great Britain any more than if in terms a tariff duty of 100 per cent had been laid, because the British authorities committed, as they claim to be, to free trade with all the world, knowing the disastrous effect to them of this importation, knowing the effect would be such as has been described by the Senator from Missouri in this country by the importation of more vigorous Canadian stock, knowing the effect upon the British producer of live stock, shut out from the English market absolutely every head of horned cattle or of sheep. They can simply be introduced there, in effect, as killed beef or mutton.

This was brought out in the tariff discussion during the last Congress, and it stood then, and stands forth palpably to-day, as an instance of the inconsistency of the whole British theory of free trade. When it is found that it interfers with a particular industry in that country, they do not in the form of tariff and prohibition and protection enact duties as we do, but proceed under another form to enact an outright prohibitory tariff.

I do not want this resolution to pass without calling attention again to the inconsistency on the part of Great Britain in this regard. I do not oppose the resolution, because it has been considered and has had the scrutiny of the proper committee, but I wanted to call attention to this fact.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I deprecate the introduction of tariff discussion in regard to a resolution of this sort, but I shall certainly not be placed, if I can avoid it, in the attitude of defending either the motives or the action of the authorities of Great Britain.

It is only proper to state as a historicol fact that their action has been based ostensibly upon the allegation that there have been sporadic cases of pluero-pneumonia found in exported American cattle. That these cases have been largely exaggerated from mercenary motives in different quarters in England I think was made fully apparent by the reports of the Committee on Meat Products, to which I refer Senators in regard to all of the facts attending the question

What I desire to do is to remove the obstacle without irritation, without friction, because I consider it the first oject of statesmanship to bring about results that will enure to the benefit of our own people.

Here is the fact that these quarantine regulations exist, and it is only proper to say that the British authorities have stated that they desire to see the operation of the act of March 1, 1890, which we enacted for the inspection of cattle sent abroad, before they take definite action in regard to these quarantine regulations. If, after our State Department has called the attention of Great Britain to this subject, and has calmly presented all the facts and put, as I think it can be done beyond any reasonable question, the truth before them that no diseased cattle for export are sent from this country, the British authorities shall then still refuse to treat American cattle justly, I shall not be found lax when the Senator from Maine proposes the most extreme measure in order to remove this outrage.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will allow me, I go with him in his attempt to have these most extreme regulations abrogated and removed. I wish that I could say that I believed he would be successful; but the Senator will find, and his project will find when it reaches Great Britain, not by any means for the first time, that in his path will lie not only the quarantine officers and the boards of health, and not so much the quarantine officers and the boards of health as the British farmer—the British raiser of cattle and sheep; and the Senator's efforts will be futile, because he will then come face to face with what is the actual trouble in this case and not the ostensible trouble; and then he will confront the other question, where he and I may be found together, where perhaps nothing but retaliation will be the proper course. I bid him godspeed in this attempt at solving this question in an amicable and diplomatic way.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I deprecate again the prophecy of evil and disaster which the Senator from Maine has made, but even if it should eventuate as the Senator says, it seems to me that our duty in the premises is plain, and that is, to make ourselves absolutely right before we resort to retaliation. Retaliation between nations is war, and although not carried on by ships and armies it is carried on through commercial regulations that are just as deadly.

But again permit me to say that although the Senator generally examines very analytically and exhaustively every public question brought before him, he has hardly paid as much attention to this matter as it has been my official duty to do. I can state with absolute certainty that unanimity of sentiment has not existed even among the British cattle-raisers and farmers on this subject. If the Senator will look at the report of the Committee on Meat Products he will find statements there of British farmers and cattle-raisers to the effect that these quarantine regulations are militating directly against their interests, and he will find that Parliament has been petitioned repeatedly to remove or modify the quarantine regulations so that store cattle, as the English term them, may be brought from America into that country to be fed by their farmers. They are not united upon any tariff question or any other in regard to cattle in Great Britain, but a very large and influential class of their people are anxious that we shall succeed in removing or modifying the unjust regulations. I ask for the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to ask the Senator from Missouri what information he has as respects any negotiation or suggestion on this subject that has been had during the interval of nine months between the adjournment of Congress and the present session. It may be that all that is proposed in the joint resolution has already been attempted by the State Department. I confess that I do not know myself the fact as respects the situation.

Mr. VEST. I do not think that any action has been had. I called upon the Secretary of State twice, but he was at the time suffering a severe indisposition, and I was not able to see him, and no subordinate could give me any information upon the subject.

Mr. ALLISON. May it not be that upon this matter action by the State Department has already been taken and failed, and therefore the Secretary of Agriculture has suggested this extreme remedy?

Mr. VEST. There is no such intimation in the report of the Secretary of Agriculture, and I should certainly have heard of it, I think, if there had been anything of the kind. I do not think anything has occurred between the two countries on the subject. If the Senator will turn to the report he will see that so far from intimating that negotiations have failed the statement is positive that this suggestion by the Secretary of Agriculture comes from him alone. He says:

> Unless we can secure from the British Government the removal of the unfriendly restrictions now bearing so hardly upon our cattle trade, I shall feel it to be my duty to suggest the rigid enforcement of the law now in existence prohibiting the import into the United States of all live animals.

I am very certain that under the peculiar circumstances which have surrounded the State Department during the last summer, and owing to the fact that the joint resolution passed the Senate but did not pass the House of Representatives, there have been no negotiations. Even if there had been, I should ask for the passage of the joint resolution, because it would be the authoritative expression of the representatives of the people of the United States to the British Government, and would necessarily have more effect than any communication coming from any other quarter, even from the Chief Executive himself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no amendment it will be reported to the Senate.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 2 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, January 6, 1892, at 12 o'clock meridian.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. and was called to order by the Clerk, Hon. JAMES KERR, who said:

I regret to announce the illness of the Speaker of the House of Representatives. Owing to his absence, it becomes my duty as Clerk of the House, to call the House to order. The only business now in order is the election of a Speaker pro tempore.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS.

NOTIFICATION OF THE SENATE.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit the following resolution for immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House inform the Senate that Hon. BENTON MCMILLIN, a Representative from the State of Tennessee, has been elected Speaker pro tempore during the absence of the Speaker.

The resolution was agreed to.

TEMPORARY ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present the following report from the Committee on Rules for present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules report the following order and recommend its adoption:

Immediately after the reading of the Journal on Tuesday, January 5, 1892, the executive and other communications on the Speaker's table shall be laid before the House, to be referred to appropriate committees, and thereafter the States and Territories shall be called for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions, memorials of State and Territorial Legislatures, for reference to appropriate committees, according to the provisions of Rule II, Fiftieth Congress, so far as the same is applicable, and shall proceed until the call is completed.

There shall be printed 500 copies of each bill of a public nature, of which 25 shall be deposited in the office of the Clerk of the House, and the remainder shall be deposited in the document room of the House for the use of the members.

Unless ordered by the House, no private bill or bill for the improvement of rivers and harbors, resolution, or other proposition reported by a committee shall be printed unless the same be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS] has the floor. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY] later.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I will yield to my friend from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY] if he desires to submit any remarks upon the report.

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Speaker, I could not hear very well the resolution as read by the Clerk, but it provides, as I understood it, that private bills should be placed in the box and should not be printed.

Mr. CATCHINGS. The gentleman is mistaken in his hearing of the reading. It does not provide that private bills shall be placed in the box, but on the contrary.

Mr. MCCREARY. It provides that they shall not be printed, as I understand.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Yes, it does provide that.

Mr. MCCREARY. It is to that subject, Mr. Speaker, that I wish to address my remarks. It has been a rule since I have been in Congress that 100 copies of each private bill should be printed. I believe that every private bill which is introduced in this House should be printed, and I desire to amend the report so as to require private bills to be printed.

Several MEMBERS. Make it 50.

Mr. MCCREARY. It is suggested by members around me to make the number 50.

Mr. DINGLEY. I would suggest to my friend that it will cost substantially the same to print 25 bills as it would to print 100 bills.

Mr. HEARD. That is so.

Mr. DINGLEY. There would not be 5 cents difference in the expense.

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Speaker, it is very important, I think, that private bills should be printed; at least a certain number of them; because, when we introduce a private bill we wish copies not only for the purpose of proper consideration but in order that we may notify the man who desires the introduction of the bill. It also often happens that we are written to and requested to send copies of bills that have been introduced by other members of the House of Representatives.

I suppose that ever since Congress has been meeting, almost since the beginning of the history of Congress, it has been customary to print a certain number of copies of every private bill. I therefore move to amend so as to require that 25 copies of each private bill introduced be printed.

Mr. BOWERS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, if he will allow me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield?

Mr. MCCREARY. Certainly.

Mr. BOWERS. Can the gentleman tell us the difference in the cost of printing 50 and 100 copies of each private bill?

Mr. MCCREARY. No, sir; that is the business of the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BOWERS. It will not be 5 cents.

Mr. MCCREARY. That, Mr. Speaker, is within the province of the Committee on Printing. My object is to have a certain number of each private bill printed. I believe it is necessary; and I object to and shall oppose anything that prohibits the printing of private bills.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to address myself to the amendment under discussion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. McCREARY. Yes, sir.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, at the close of the last session of Congress there was a joint resolution passed which authorized the Senate Committee on Printing, which is a permanent committee, and two members of the House Committee on Printing who had been reëlected to the present Congress, to sit as a joint committee during the recess, and to codify and examine fully all the printing laws and make report to the Fifty-second Congress. The joint committee, I will say briefly, have taken three or four hundred pages of printed testimony, and have addressed communications to all the heads of Departments and Bureaus of the Government seeking information on the subject of public printing. These communications have been answered, and much information elicited. The committee have prepared and will submit at an early day an elaborate report covering all this question of public printing.

The question of printing private bills has been acted upon by this committee. Heretofore the Senate has had printed 925 copies of private bills. The House of Representatives, in the last Congress, printed 100 copies of private bills. This joint committee, in the interest of economy, has made a most earnest effort to reduce the cost of public printing. They have agreed that the printing shall be uniform for the two Houses as to private bills, and have agreed to cut down from 925 to, I think, 100 copies of all private bills for the use of the Senate, the number which the House has heretofore printed. I agree with the gentleman from Kentucky that we ought to print private bills. In answer to the question submitted by the gentleman on the right as to the cost of printing, I can say that the difference between printing 100 copies and 50 copies of any private bill will be very small—almost insignificant. If we are to print 25 or 50 copies we had just as well print 100.

Mr. OATES. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if the joint committee thinks that the printing of 25 or 50 copies of each private bill would cost practically any more than 100 copies.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I say it is very little—almost insignificant.

Mr. McCREARY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCREARY. Do you state that for the Senate there will be 100 copies of each private bill printed, according to an agreement made by the Joint Committee on Printing?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I stated, Mr. Speaker, that the joint committee will recommend that the Senate reduce the number from 925 to 100 copies of private bills, and that the House will also have printed for its use 100 copies of all private bills. If I remember correctly, the reduction is to 100 copies. It is a very large reduction.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Speaker, I was about to ask the gentleman if there was any reason why we should not have 100 bills printed for the use of this House, as the Senate is to have 100 copies printed for the use of the Senate; but now I understand him to say that he is in favor of having printed 100 copies of every private bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I say that the joint committee have recommended that, and will submit their report at a very early day.

Mr. McCREARY. But that is not done in the report made by the Committee on Rules this morning.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Oh, not at all. The joint committee to which I refer is a committee appointed by the last Congress, while the Committee on Rules is a committee of this Congress, and they have submitted a report, which is now being considered.

Mr. McCREARY. Will the gentleman permit me to make a suggestion?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCREARY. As the Committee on Printing will report in favor of printing 100 copies of each private bill, I am ready to accept the proposition of the chairman of that committee and make the number 100 copies of each private bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Let the gentleman offer an amendment making it 100 copies of each private bill, if he desires to do so.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. McCREARY. Yes, sir.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Will the gentleman from Georgia allow me to say a few words, which I think will obviate further discussion?

Mr. BLOUNT. Just a moment.

Mr. Speaker, I trust that we shall not be in any very great haste about economizing in this direction, for we may find that we are doing exactly the opposite thing. It is well known to every gentleman who has had connection with the legislation of the House in the past, that what are known as private bills, taken up on each Friday of the week, cover during the session of Congress many millions of dollars.

It is well known also that often the examination of those bills by members of the House and of the reports in connection therewith has defeated measure after measure day after day at every session of Congress. Why, then, cut off from members the facility which is given to them for forming a proper judgment as to the merits of measures by putting it in their power to examine the bills and reports in print? Again, sir, it seems to me that we would err in taking this matter away from the committee of this House to which it properly belongs, the Committee on Printing, a committee which is charged with this subject, which has uniformly exercised the power of making recommendations to the House in relation to printing, and which is fully competent to make such recommendations in this case.

I trust, sir, that in this instance we shall follow the spirit of the rule which has generally governed the House in taking the opinions of its committees on important questions before acting on them. It seems to me, therefore, that what is now proposed ought not to be done; and so far as the resolution relates to the number of copies of bills to be printed, I trust that it will be withdrawn, and that that portion referring to the introduction of bills will be allowed to stand. I move, Mr. Speaker, to strike out so much of the resolution as relates to the number of bills to be printed.

Mr. HEARD. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCREARY. I understand the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] to move to strike out so much of the report of the Committee on Rules as refers to the printing of bills. If that is done will not the effect be that the bills will not be printed at all?

Mr. HEARD. I was going to ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] how his proposition would affect that question. I think it would have that effect.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think otherwise.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state in response to the suggestion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] that the rule reported from the Committee on Rules provides for the printing of a certain number of copies of bills, and the Chair knows of no general law under which they would be printed without the adoption of some rule.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think otherwise, Mr. Speaker; but to avoid a controversy which would not be easily settled at this time, I will withdraw my motion and agree to the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY]. That will at least furnish us some information in this connection.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to submit a few words in behalf of this report. In the first place, gentlemen have overlooked the fact that the resolution which the Committee on Rules has now reported is not intended to constitute any part of the permanent rules of this House. It is designed simply as a means of dealing with an exigency which is now upon us. It is well understood that at the beginning of each session of Congress bills are introduced not only by hundreds, but by thousands and tens of thousands, and that there is always a tremendous pressure upon the Government Printing Office to print those bills and get them back to the House so that they may be ready for consideration. It was believed by the Committee on Rules that the business of the House would be facilitated by pretermitting temporarily the printing of private bills; and the object of the rule now reported is to relieve the Government Printing Office of some portion of the pressure to which it would otherwise be subjected.

This rule does not provide that there shall never be any printing of private bills, but simply that for the time being no such bills shall be printed.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CATCHINGS. I will yield for a question.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to submit this suggestion to the gentleman. There may be referred to the Committee on Claims, for instance, to-day, fifty or perhaps a hundred bills. That committee convenes, and under the usage those bills will be severally assigned to subcommittees. Now, if there is but one copy of each bill in existence will not the committees be greatly embarrassed in their consideration?

Mr. CATCHINGS. Undoubtedly there would be some embarrassment to a committee if it were required to proceed with the consideration of bills existing only in manuscript, but, for the reasons I have stated, it was thought by the Committee on Rules that, for the present at least, it would be better that the Government Printing Office should not be required to print any bills except those of a public character.

I wish to say further, for the information of the House, that the Committee on Rules felt some hesitation as to whether this resolution should be reported at all or not. It was believed by the committee, as it is believed, I think, generally, by gentlemen who have had experience here, that there is very great room for reform in this matter of the printing of bills; but this resolution, as I have said, was adopted merely as a temporary expedient. I do not think, however, Mr. Speaker, that there will be any such great hardship from the adoption of this resolution as gentlemen seem to imagine. As matter of fact, nine-tenths of the bills that will be introduced here to-day have been already printed in former Congresses.

I hold in my hand a package of fifty-four bills which are to be introduced by my friend from Indiania, which have been introduced and printed in previous Congresses. A great many of the bills that will be introduced here now have been heretofore printed, so that any gentleman who is specially interested in knowing their contents, can go to the file room and obtain copies. In my judgment, therefore, the inconvenience that would result from the adoption of this rule is very greatly exaggerated. But, as I said in the beginning, it was not the intention of the Committee on Rules in reporting this resolution to establish any permanent rule, but simply a rule to meet a temporary emergency. There is undoubtedly great room for reform in this whole matter of printing bills, and when the report of the Joint Committee on Printing is received it will do doubt deal with the subject as it should be dealt with. In the mean time the Committee on Rules thought there would be no great inconvenience, but, on the contrary, that business would be facilitated, by the adoption of this resolution, so as to relieve in some measure the pressure which would otherwise come upon the Government Printing Office.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS] will allow me to ask him why it would not be well to allow public bills as well as executive communications and other matters lying on the Speaker's table to be disposed of to-day, allowing the question of private bills to go over until next Monday. It is now Tuesday, and it would seem that no harm can be done by allowing this question with regard to private bills to go over for the present. Public bills can be introduced to-day, and the Speaker's table can be cleared of executive communications and other matters which may have accumulated upon it. In this way the committees of the House can proceed at once to discharge their public duties, and private bills will not suffer by waiting four or five days. In the mean time the Printing Office will have printed the public bills, and the pressure as to that matter will be removed.

By next Monday the Committee on Printing may get in its report, as I understand from the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON]. Hence we may avoid any disagreement among ourselves in this matter by simply allowing private bills to lie over until Monday next.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I do not feel authorized to accept a proposition looking to the nonintroduction to-day, and if necessary, to-morrow, of private bills. The resolution reported by the Committee on Rules looks to the introduction of private as well as public bills, beginning to-day and continuing until that order of business is disposed of.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Would the gentleman object to an amendment striking from the resolution the provision in regard to the introduction of private bills?

Mr. CATCHINGS. Rather than do that, Mr. Speaker, I would consent to an amendment providing for the printing of private bills.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. CATCHINGS. The committee has no desire to place itself in conflict with the House in this matter. This is simply intended as a tentative proposition. I am very glad that gentlemen have expressed their opinions so freely. The Committee on Rules has no desire whatever to prevent the printing of these private bills if the House desires that they be printed. I have simply undertaken to give the reasons which actuated the committee in making this report.

As I said in the beginning of my remarks, we hesitated for a long time before agreeing to make the report, and finally we thought we would present the question to the House and let the House decide it. But since there seems to be a disposition on the part of the House to have these private bills printed, I shall very cheerfully accept an amendment looking to that end. I do think, however, that 100 copies are too great a number to be printed of any private bill. I think we ought not to print, at least for the present, a larger number of copies of private bills than may be necessary for the convenient transaction of the business before the committees. I suggest, therefore, that the proposed amendment provide for the printing of only 25 copies of each private bill.

Several MEMBERS. O, no!

A MEMBER. One hundred copies will cost very litle more than 25 copies.

Mr. CATCHINGS. So far as concerns the mere question of setting up the type, the cost of printing 100 copies would be no more than that of printing 25 copies. But when we take into consideration the cost of paper, ink, and other necessary matters of expenditure, the difference in cost may be considerable. As I have before said, here is a package of bills, 54 in number, which will be introduced to-day, all of which have been printed in a previous Congress. There will be perhaps 5,000 or 6,000 bills introduced to-day, or during the continuance of this order, and the difference in cost between printing 25 copies of each private bill and printing 100 copies would be very great.

I do not believe myself, Mr. Speaker, that there ever has been a time when it was necessary to print 100 copies of any private bill: and I think that in the interest of economy the number of copies to be printed of any private bill should be limited to 25. I trust at least this will be the order while we are proceeding in this temporary and provisional way with the business of the House. When the Committee on Rules shall make a regular report, and when the Committee on Printing shall have made its report on this subject, the House can definitely and deliberately determine how many copies of private bills should be printed. I will ask leave myself to offer an amendment to the resolution providing for printing 25 copies of each private bill. To this an amendment, if desired, can be offered by any other gentleman.

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the remarks of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS], and I have failed to hear any good argument for not printing the private bills which may be introduced into the House. It has been the rule since we have had a Congress to print private bills, so that any member introducing such a bill may send a copy to the person who asked for its introduction, and so that when the appropriate committee may come to consider the bill, each member of the committee may have a printed copy of the bill before him, and also that any citizen desiring a copy of the bill may obtain it. I am in favor of economy, but I do not think this is the right kind of economy; I do not think this is the place to begin to economize. The cost of printing 100 copies of each private bill will be very small, and the difference between printing that number and printing 25 (to which I understand my friend from Mississippi consents) is so small that it is not worth considering.

It has already been agreed, I understand, by the Committee on Printing that there should be printed 100 copies of each private bill introduced in this House and the Senate. I see no reason why we should not print 100 copies of each private bill introduced here. I adhere to the amendment I have offered and ask a vote upon it—the amendment authorizing the printing of 100 copies of each private bill introduced in the House under this order.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, I should like to know exactly what the status of this important economical question is. I would like to offer an amendment, which I think of some consequence, in reference to the introduction of private bills. So far as concerns this proposition that for the sake of economy we print 25 copies instead of 100 copies of each private bill, it appears to me the smallest piece of economy I have ever heard suggested. But I think some provision ought to be made in the report of the Committee on Rules by which we may get rid of the necessity of calling the roll for the introduction of private bills. As an amendment to the report of the committee I wish to offer, whenever it may be in order, now or later, the first section of Rule XXII of the Fifty-first Congress, which I ask the Clerk to read. I have not kept the run of the discussion so as to know whether this amendment is in order at this time or not.

The Clerk read as follows:

Members having petitions or memorials or bills of a private nature to present may deliver them to the Clerk, indorsing their names and the reference or disposition to be made thereof; and said petitions and memorials and bills of a private nature, except such as, in the judgment of the Speaker, are of an obscene or insulting character, shall be entered on the Journal with the names of the members presenting them, and the Clerk shall furnish a transcript of such entry to the Official Reporters of Debates for publication in the RECORD.

Mr. ENLOE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that there is not any difference, as I understand it, in the position of gentlemen here, as far as the discussion shows, in regard to the expense of printing these bills, involving merely the additional cost of paper and presswork, and that it is an insignificant matter, not enough, in fact, to consume the time of the House in discussing. But we ought to know how we are to introduce the private bills. I think the rule just read is a good one and ought to be adopted, so as to dispatch the business of the House as rapidly as possible.

Mr. MANSUR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to add but a word in regard to the printing of private bills, or, as to the number of private bills to be printed. All of the old members of the House know from their experience in the past that the custom has been to furnish to every member of the committee a copy of each and every bill going to that committee for the purpose of making up a file for the committee. This has resulted in making the files, as a rule, too large. Take, for instance, the Committee on Claims. A matter comes up in that committee, and of course each and every member will desire to know before passing upon it the merits of the bill before them. We all have a copy for that purpose. But after the bill has been considered and reported to the House it is not regarded as necessary to keep these extra bills any longer and they are thrown aside or destroyed. The case comes before the House, and we have all seen time and again something alleged against a bill; some claim that it involved a job or embodied an erroneous principle, and we have even heard harsher terms alleged against bills, and instantly every page on the floor is called up and sent to get a copy of the bill.

Time and again have we seen this done and the interest of every member on the floor instantly called to some pending proposition. Now, if there were but 25 bills printed the copies would soon be exhausted. Nothing less than a hundred would meet, in my opinion, the necessities of the case, and that number would be required to promote the speedy and prompt dispatch of business, and the just deliberations of this body in the passage of the various measures coming before it.

I believe with my friend from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE], that it would be well to adopt the rule that we had in the last House so far as the introduction of private bills and memorials is concerned. It has worked no injustice or injury to that class of bills in the past, and, as it tends to facilitate, to a certain extent, the business of the House, I believe the rule is a good one and could wisely be adopted.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to speak in behalf of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky. The main cost in printing private bills is in the typesetting. It is proposed to print only 25 copies of each bill. Why not 100 after the type is set? The price of the paper is almost the sole additional cost. It will cost not quite a cent to print 75 additional copies of each private bill. Then, if there are six thousand private bills introduced in a session, it will cost at the end of the session just $60. [Laughter.]

When a member of Congress wants a private bill, he wants it bad. He will lose more time, and the House itself lose more money by having men running around hunting up and copying private bills than it will save by such economy. The document room is always in demand, and its value will be enhanced if 100 copies of each bill are printed instead of 25. [Applause.]

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, as I stated when I had the floor before, the Committee on Rules hesitated a long time before undertaking to deal with this question at all; and it was only because of the fact that a large number of gentlemen pressed it for the consideration of the committee that we finally concluded to report it in this shape, merely suggesting the idea to the House for its consideration and adoption. The original purpose of the committee was to bring in the resolution in blank, as far as this feature is concerned, and leave the House to say what disposition should be made as to the number of bills of this character printed.

But, Mr. Speaker, it is evident to my mind, from the discussion which has taken place here, that it is not the desire of the House that there shall be any limitation on the number printed in previous Congresses; and, therefore, with the consent of my colleague on the Committee on Rules, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], I will accept an amendment providing for the printing of 100 of these private bills, which was the number authorized in the Fiftieth Congress, for the purpose of ending the discussion.

Mr. McCREARY. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CATCHINGS. Certainly.

Mr. McCREARY. I could not hear distinctly what the gentleman stated, but I understood him to say, and I rise to ask if that understanding was correct, that he accepted my amendment authorizing 100 copies of each private bill to be printed?

Mr. CATCHINGS. That is what I said.

Mr. McCREARY. I so understood.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I said that I would accept that amendment, and leave it to the House to adopt or reject it, as they saw proper.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. CATCHINGS. Certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understood the gentleman from Mississippi to state that he accepted the amendment not only to print 100 copies of the private bills, but in a previous speech intimated that this was to be regarded as a temporary arrangement until the permanent rules were reported?

Mr. CATCHINGS. That was the idea of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. ENLOE. I would like to ask if the gentleman from Mississippi will accept my suggestion as to the introduction of private bills?

Mr. CATCHINGS. No; I will not accept that, although I quite agree with the gentleman as to the propriety of the suggestion, and, as a matter of fact, the Committee on Rules at one time thought of reporting it. But it came to their knowledge that many gentlemen on the floor desired that private bills should be introduced just as the public bills at the beginning of the session, and so, as this is but a temporary arrangement, we thought it better to yield to the wishes of members in that regard and let them be introduced as the public bills are, on the call of the States and Territories.

Mr. ENLOE. What is the objection to the introduction of the bills and petitions under that rule? I can not see any.

Mr. CATCHINGS. There is none in the world, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. ENLOE. This will facilitate the business of the House.

Mr. CATCHINGS. There is not the slightest objection on the face of the earth, so far as I know, to the principle involved in the resolution of my friend, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE]. It was the practice in the Forty-ninth, Fiftieth, and Fifty-first Congresses, and I have no doubt whatever that it will be the practice in the Fifty-second Congress.

Mr. ENLOE. Then why should not this be the practice to-day?

Mr. CATCHINGS. For the reasons which I have already stated, that a number of gentlemen have requested the privilege of introducing private bills, on the call of States and Territories, in the same manner as public bills.

Mr. ENLOE. I do not see why there should be a rule adopted to-day which is not to be the permanent rule of the House, or which is not in accord with the principle that is to regulate the permanent rules of the House.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I have attempted to answer the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE]. I have stated to him that I have not the slightest doubt that when the permanent rules are established for the government of the business of this House it will be provided, as it was in the Forty-ninth, Fiftieth, and Fifty-first Congresses, that private bills, memorials, and resolutions shall be introduced by handing them to the Clerk. I also stated to the gentleman that the Committee on Rules had it in mind to make that provision with reference to the introduction of such bills to-day, but that a great number of gentlemen requested that they might be allowed the privilege of introducing their private bills to-day in the same manner as their public bills. And, Mr. Speaker, the House having nothing on the face of the earth to do to-day but to sit here and introduce bills, we concluded we would gratify them.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will allow me, I do not see any reason why every gentleman here should not have the opportunity to introduce his bills to-day just as others will do hereafter, by putting the bills in the box instead of having them read by the Clerk.

Mr. OATES. I would like to suggest to my friend from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE] that so far as the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is concerned the bills will all appear in it just the same.

Mr. ENLOE. Of course they will all get into the RECORD just the same.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire what provision is made with reference to the introduction of petitions?

Mr. CATCHINGS. I would ask that the resolution be reported again.

The Clerk read as follows:

Immediately after the reading of the Journal on Tuesday, January 5, 1892, the executive and other communications on the Speaker's table shall be laid before the House, to be referred to appropriate committees; and thereafter the States and Territories shall be called for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions, memorials of State and Territorial Legislatures, for reference to appropriate committees, according to the provisions of Rule XI, Fiftieth Congress, so far as the same is applicable, and shall proceed until the call is completed.

There shall be printed 500 copies of each bill of a public nature, of which 25 shall be deposited in the office of the Clerk of the House, and the remainder shall be deposited in the document room of the House for the use of members. Unless ordered by the House, no private bill or bill for the improvement of rivers and harbors, resolution, or other proposition reported by a committee shall be printed, unless the same be placed upon the Calendar. There shall also be printed 100 copies of each private bill.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I think the amendment of my friend from Kentucky should involve the striking out of so much of the latter part of the paragraph of the resolution as provides that "unless ordered," etc., so that that would be entirely eliminated from the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the portion indicated to be stricken out.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following words:
"Unless ordered by the House, no private bill or bill for the improvement of rivers and harbors, resolution, or other proposition reported by a committee shall be printed unless the same be placed on the Calendar."
And substitute therefor the following:
"There shall also be printed 100 copies of each private bill."

Mr. CATCHINGS. I accept the amendment in that form.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I see no provision in the resolution with reference to the introduction of petitions.

Mr. CATCHINGS. My attention is called by my friend from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] to the fact that in the preparation of that resolution no provision has been made for the disposition of petitions. I ask unanimous consent to amend the resolution by inserting the word "petitions" in connection with the word "memorials."

Mr. DINGLEY. Then shall petitions be presented in open House?

Mr. CATCHINGS. I think so, under the resolution.

Mr. ENLOE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS] that we may have a vote on the amendment which I offered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair suggests to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS] that the change he makes would alter the phraseology so that it would not apply to petitions, and it would probably take an additional amendment.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Then, Mr. Speaker, instead of proposing the amendment in that form I will adopt the suggestion of the Speaker pro tempore. I was misled as to the phraseology, not having the resolution before me.

Mr. LANHAM. I wish to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I will yield to my friend in a moment. I desire to perfect the resolution while I have it in my mind. I desire to amend the resolution by providing that all petitions may be introduced by placing them in the petition box or by delivery to the Clerk.

Mr. ENLOE. And private bills?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will again report the resolution.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Let us have a vote on the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS] will please indicate the amendment he desires concerning petitions.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, my motion, which the Chair can put without my reducing it to writing, is simply that all petitions may be introduced by delivery to the Clerk for appropriate reference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. McCREARY. I think we should proceed in regular order; and I would like a vote on the first amendment proposed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky that that will come first, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Mississippi to offer an amendment later on. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky as accepted by the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, before that is put I desire to say one word, just to correct a statement which I made a few moments ago, to the effect that the Joint Committee on Printing had agreed to recommend the printing of 100 copies of each private bill. It is 250; not 100. I want to correct my statement, as it was misleading.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Now, Mr. Speaker, let us have a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I propose to offer an amendment to the resolution proposing "that all petitions may be introduced by delivery to the Clerk for appropriate reference."

The Clerk read as follows:

That all petitions be introduced by delivery to the Clerk for appropriate reference.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. ENLOE. I offer as a substitute for that the amendment which I suggested a few moments ago. I will ask the Clerk to read it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee will come better later on, when the Chair will recognize the gentleman.

Mr. ENLOE. It relates to exactly the same subject. It relates to private bills, petitions, and memorials, and covers the whole ground. I want to offer it as a substitute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands the gentleman to say that it is similar in nature. The Chair was not aware that it was. If so, it will be in order as a substitute, and the Clerk will therefore report the substitute offered by the gentleman from Tennessee to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Let us have a vote on the substitute, Mr. Speaker.

The Clerk read as follows:

First section of Rule XXII:
Members having petitions, or memorials, or bills of a private nature to present may deliver them to the Clerk, indorsing their names and the reference or disposition to be made thereof, and said petitions or memorials and bills of a private nature, except such as, in the judgment of the Speaker, are of an obscene or insulting character, shall be entered on the Journal, with the names of the members presenting them, and the Clerk shall furnish a transcript of such entry to the Official Reporters of Debates for publication in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Tennessee to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Let us have the substitute read again, Mr. Speaker, as I did not hear it distinctly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the substitute will again be reported.

The substitute was again reported.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that that has been the rule in the Forty-ninth, Fiftieth, and Fifty-first Congresses upon this subject.

The question was taken, and the substitute was agreed to.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Now I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM].

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, if I understood the reading of the report from the Committee on Rules——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment as substituted.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, if I understood the reading of the report of the Committee on Rules, it provides that bills and joint resolutions shall be introduced under Rule XI of the Fiftieth Congress.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Shall be referred under that rule.

Mr. LANHAM. Referred under that rule. Now, under the rules of the Fiftieth Congress there is no provision made for at least one committee of the present Congress that was not organized at that time. For instance, the Select Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands in the United States was organized and created in the last Congress and did not exist in the Fiftieth Congress.

Mr. CATCHINGS. If my friend will allow me, I will say that I have a resolution covering that proposition, which I propose to offer now.

Mr. LANHAM. On that very question?

Mr. CATCHINGS. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the report of the Committee on Rules as amended.

The question was taken, and the report as amended was adopted.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the select committees heretofore provided, as follows:
All propositions touching the civil service of the United States, to the Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.
All propositions touching the election and tenure of office of the President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress, count of the electoral vote, and succession to the office of President, to the Committee on Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress.
All proposed legislation concerning the Eleventh Census of the United States, to the Committee on the Eleventh Census.
All propositions relating to the ventilation and acoustics of the Hall of the House of Representatives, to the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics.
All propositions touching the alcoholic liquor traffic, to the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.
All proposed legislation concerning the irrigation of arid lands in the United States, to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands in the United States.
All proposed legislation concerning immigration and naturalization, to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.
All proposed legislation concerning the Columbian Exposition, to the Committee on the Columbian Exposition.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I move the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi whether that includes appropriations for the various objects that are named in this list of special committees. For instance, it is understood we may be asked for quite a large appropriation for the Columbian Fair; we may have some legislation looking to an appropriation for the irrigation of arid lands, as was done heretofore in the Fifty-first Congress. Now, it is my desire to ask whether this report of the Committee on Rules assigns the duty of appropriation as well as the duty of legislation.

Mr. CATCHINGS. That is not my understanding, I will say to my friend.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. There may be some fear that we may take some step which would have such an effect, and I desire to have that understood now.

Mr. LANHAM. I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky that there was no authority conferred upon the Select Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands in the United States in the last Congress to make any appropriation, but simply matters of legislation were referred to that committee. I do not think it is contemplated to give them the power to make appropriations under this resolution.

Mr. CATCHINGS. The simple object of the resolution is to refer matters that have been previously referred to select committees. There has been no change made in the jurisdiction. I do not think that the resolution gives them the right to make appropriations of money.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I simply desired that that should be stated publicly to the House, so that if we shall pass this resolution it shall be passed with the understanding that it refers to the duties of special committees as to legislation, limits them to the question of legislation, and that they are not given jurisdiction over the question of appropriations.

Mr. CATCHINGS. That is the understanding, Mr. Speaker. Now I move the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken on the resolution, and it was adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed;

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

My attention having been called to the necessity of bringing about a uniform usage and spelling of geographic names in the publications of the Government, the following Executive order was issued on the 4th day of September, 1890:

"As it is desirable that uniform usage in regard to geographic nomenclature and orthography obtain throughout the Executive Departments of the Government, and particularly upon the maps and charts issued by the various Departments and Bureaus, I hereby constitute a Board on Geographic Names, and designate the following persons, who have heretofore coöperated for a similar purpose under the authority of the several Departments, Bureaus, and institutions with which they are connected, as members of said Board:

"Capt. Henry L. Howison, Light-House Board, Treasury Department.

"Capt. Thomas Turtle, Engineer Corps, War Department.

"Lieut. Richardson Clover, Hydrographic Office, Navy Department.

"Pierson H. Bristow, Post-Office Department.

"Otis T. Mason, Smithsonian Institution.

"Herbert G. Ogden, United States Coast and Geodetic Survey.

"Henry Gannett, United States Geological Survey.

"Marcus Baker, United States Geological Survey.

"To this Board shall be referred all unsettled questions concerning geographic names which arise in the Departments, and the decisions of the Board are to be accepted by these Departments as the standard authority in such matters.

"Department officers are instructed to afford such assistance as may be proper to carry on the work of this Board.

"The members of this Board shall serve without additional compensation, and its organization shall entail no expense on the Government."

The report of the Board thus constituted has been submitted to me and is herewith transmitted for the information of Congress, and with a view to its publication in suitable form, if such action is deemed by Congress to be desirable.

FAMINE IN RUSSIA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following message from the President; which was read, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The famine prevailing in some of the provinces of Russia is so severe and widespread as to have attracted the sympathetic interest of a large number of our liberal and favored people. In some of the great grain-producing States of the West movements have already been organized to collect flour and meal for the relief of these perishing Russian families, and the response has been such as to justify the belief that a ship's cargo can very soon be delivered at the seaboard, through the generous coöperation of the transportation lines. It is most appropriate that a people whose storehouses have been so lavishly filled with all the fruits of the earth by the gracious favor of God should manifest their gratitude by large gifts to His suffering children in other lands. The Secretary of the Navy has no steam vessel at his disposal that could be used for the transportation of these supplies, and I therefore recommend that he be authorized to charter a suitable vessel to receive them, if a sufficient amount should be offered, and to send them under the charge of a naval officer to such Russian port as may be most convenient for ready distribution to those most in need.

RELIEF OF FAMINE IN RUSSIA.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of their secretaries, informed the House that the Senate had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 21) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to transport contributions for the relief of the suffering poor in Russia.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that that joint resolution be permitted to lie on the Speaker's table for the present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there is no objection it will be so ordered.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, what will be the effect of granting the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule the joint resolution would remain upon the Speaker's table until to-morrow morning anyway. The effect of agreeing to the proposition of the gentleman from Georgia would be to let it remain there until called up.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to state, Mr. Speaker, that I have not had an opportunity to examine this joint resolution, but I am informed that large contributions have been made from private sources for the aid of those who are suffering in Russia, and I understand that this joint resolution simply allows the Secretary of the Navy to use a certain number of vessels for the purpose of transporting those supplies. I do not desire to ask the House to do anything with the joint resolution at this time; my request is simply that it be allowed for the present to remain on the Speaker's table.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I ask the question because I am aware that that is the object of the joint resolution, and it seems to me that, if we can do it, the more speedily we pass the resolution the better it will be. We know that there are twenty millions of Russians suffering from famine, and we know that Iowa and Nebraska and other States have contributed supplies for their relief, which are ready to be shipped, but have no means for transporting them; and all that is asked is that the Navy Department shall furnish those means. Now, as the Senate has passed the joint resolution, it seems to me that the quicker we pass it here the more handsome and more gracious will be our action, as well as the more beneficial to those for whose relief it is intended.

Mr. BLOUNT. I agree with what my friend from Kentucky has said; but I thought that before I entirely made up my mind on the subject I would like an opportunity to read the joint resolution.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Can we not have unanimous consent to take the joint resolution up now and pass it?

Mr. BLOUNT. If the gentleman will allow me, I think his object will be attained by my proposition.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I withdraw my request, Mr. Speaker.

There being no objection, the request of Mr. BLOUNT was then agreed to.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. This bill, Mr. Speaker, was sent formerly to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that has not been the usual reference.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Does this provide for the purchase of a site?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not understand that it so provides.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Then I misunderstood the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is to make the arsenal at Benicia an arsenal of manufacture, construction, and repair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the bill the title of which has just been read should properly go to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. OATES. Heretofore, I believe, bills of that character have gone to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sees that it has been so referred. If there be no objection it will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

There was no objection, and it was so referred.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, as the journalizing of the bills already introduced will take a very considerable time, I suggest that we now suspend the call of States and that it be resumed to-morrow after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] that the call of States for the introduction of bills be suspended until to-morrow after the reading of the Journal will be agreed to. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

COMMITTEE CLERKS.

Mr. RUSK. On behalf of the Committee on Accounts I submit for immediate consideration the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Accounts is hereby authorized and directed to designate the committees of the House to which the clerks provided for by the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1892, should be allowed and assigned for the present Congress, and to report by resolution to the House for its action thereon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. ENLOE. What is the resolution?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is a resolution relative to the assignment of clerks to committees.

Mr. ENLOE. What does the resolution provide?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the resolution will be again read. The Chair hears no objection.

The resolution of Mr. RUSK was again read.

Mr. ENLOE. I make the point of order that under the rules this resolution must go to the Committee——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that this is a resolution which was introduced on a former day.

Mr. ENLOE. Then what is it doing here now?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is reported back.

Mr. RUSK. The Chair will permit me to state that the resolution was offered on a previous day, but objection being raised, it was withdrawn, and it is now offered anew.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the Chair was in error. The resolution is offered now.

Mr. RUSK. It is offered now for immediate consideration.

Mr. ENLOE. Well, I make the point of order that it is not in order for consideration at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is well taken, if the gentleman from Tennessee insists upon it, and the resolution will be referred to the committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this is a privileged resolution and that it is in order. It incurs no expenditures at all, but simply assigns the clerks already provided by law to the several committees of the House. It has been entertained heretofore as privileged. It relates to the organization of the House and is certainly in order.

It would be in order, of course, for the gentleman to move its reference, but the call of States having been postponed until to-morrow, it is now in order for consideration if the gentleman from Maryland insists upon it.

Mr. ENLOE. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not object to the consideration of the resolution when considered at the proper time. But the call of States has not been finished. I want to introduce a few bills myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Tennessee that the call of States was suspended by consent of the House until to-morrow.

Mr. ENLOE. That has been done within the last few minutes, I suppose?

Mr. RUSK. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asked consent that the call of States be suspended until to-morrow morning. The Chair submitted the question and there was no objection.

Mr. ENLOE. Then I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SPRINGER. But I believe I still have the floor, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Maryland that in his opinion the resolution is in order for reference.

Mr. RUSK. Then, I move its reference to the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman from Tennessee will withdraw his motion for a moment the resolution will be referred.

Mr. ENLOE. Certainly; I have no objection to that.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Accounts.

DEATH OF HON. JOHN R. GAMBLE.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to yield to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] who wishes to offer a resolution as to the death of one of his colleagues.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, a melancholy duty it is, that I announce to the House the death of one of its members, my late colleague, the Hon. John R. Gamble, a Representative from the State of South Dakota.

He died at his home in the city of Yankton, suddenly of heart disease on the 14th day of August last, aged 43 years.

Although young in years, and as humanity reckons too young to die, he lived long enough to impress himself upon the history of his young State, for whose admission into the Union he had long and faithfully labored.

He was a genial gentleman, a talented lawyer, an honest man, a favorite with the people.

He was honored with the public offices of district attorney of Yankton County, United States attorney for the Territory of Dakota; as a member of both branches of the Territorial Legislature; as a member of one of its constitutional conventions; and was elected to the Fifty-second Congress, for the duties of which he was preparing when death terminated his young manhood. The members from his State will later in the session ask that a time be set apart, that appropriate action may be taken in memory of the deceased.

Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. John R. Gamble, late a Representative from South Dakota.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to his memory the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 6, 1892.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a communication from the secretary of the Boston (Mass.) Associated Board of Trade, representing 20 of the prominent business associations of Boston, Mass., inclosing resolutions adopted by that body favoring the transfer of the Revenue Marine Service of the Navy; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a communication from Miss Clara Barton, president of the American National Red Cross, calling attention to the starving condition of millions of the peasantry of Russia, and urging that the Government of the United States take such steps as will insure the most expeditious transit for large donations of grain or other supplies for the relief of the sufferers proposed to be sent by several of the Western States; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WALTHALL. At the instance of the National Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, I present two petitions of organized bodies in the State of California, having relation to public lands, which I ask may be separately noted and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Public Lands as follows:

A petition of the Bennett Valley Grange, No. 16, of California, and a petition of San José Grange, No. 10, of California, praying for the passage of an act construing the forfeiture act of September 29, 1890, according to its original and true purpose, and also for the passage of an act resuming and restoring to the public domain all lands opposite to and coterminous with those portions of any railroad line not constructed within the time or according to the terms of the law under which they are claimed.

Mr. MORGAN. From the same organized body, but in the State of Washington, petitions have been signed in respect to the lands claimed by the Northern Pacific Railroad. I present them, and move their reference to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER presented the petition of Hon. Isaac N. Blodgett and 46 other citizens of Merrimac County, N. H., praying for the free delivery of mails in country districts; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. CHANDLER. I present the petition of Louis Lambert and 418 other citizens of Oregon; the petition of Corvallis Grange, No. 242, signed by H. T. French, master, and Alice Horning, secretary, and by J. D. Johnson and 13 other members of that grange; the petition of Charles W. Manchester and 13 others; the petition of Tulare Grange, No. 198, signed by E. C. Shoemaker, master, and Bertha Ingham, secretary, and by H. C. Faber and 49 other members of that grange; and the petition of Merced Grange, No. 7, signed by L. H. Applegate, master, and Mrs. E. L. Elliott, secretary, and A. Smith, H. J. Ostrander, and 38 others, members of that grange, all signed in behalf of settlers between Wallula, Wash., and Portland, Oregon, whose lands and homes are claimed by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, which built a railroad on the side of the Columbia River opposite these lands long after any right so to build had expired. The petitioners assert that all pretense of right on the part of the company was destroyed by the forfeiture act of September 29, 1890, but that the company still annoys the settlers with its claims; and the petitioners therefore pray for the passage of an act of Congress for their relief. I move that one of the petitions be printed as a document, together with the signatures thereto, and the signatures to all similar petitions, and that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of citizens of Frankfort, Me., praying that an increase of pension be granted to Thomas Benson; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HOAR. I present the petition of Emory J. Haynes and other citizens of Boston, Mass., requesting an investigation into the tenement-house sweating system, so called, and praying that such legislation be had as will stamp out the evil. I move that the petition be printed as a public document, and that it be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR presented a petition of the New York Committee for the Prevention of State Regulation of Vice, officially signed by Mrs. Abby Hopper Gibbons, president, and Mrs. Anna Rice Powell, secretary, praying for a national commission of inquiry concerning the subject of social vice, and the alleged traffic in women and young girls for immoral purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. PEFFER presented a petition of citizens of Coffey County, Kans., praying for the passage of what is known as the Conger lard bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Coffey County, Kans., praying for the passage of legislation similar to House bill 5353 of the Fifty-first Congress, known as the "option bill;" which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. PASCO. I present a joint resolution of the Legislature of Florida in the nature of a memorial, which I ask be read and referred to the Committee on Pensions. At the proper time I shall introduce a bill for the purpose of carrying out the desires of the memorialists.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The memorial will be read.

Mr. HARRIS. Is it from a State Legislature?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is a memorial of the Legislature of Florida.

Mr. HARRIS. Then it is proper that it should be read.

The memorial was read and referred to the Committee on Pensions, as follows:

Joint resolution.

Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That the Congress of the United States be, and are hereby, requested to grant pensions to the survivors of the Seminole Indian wars of 1835-'40, and 1857-'58, and to the widows of the deceased soldiers of such Indian wars.

[SEAL.] Approved June 8, 1890.

STATE OF FLORIDA,
Office Secretary of State, ss:

I, John L. Crawford, secretary of state, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a correct transcript of the original now on file in this office.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State of Florida, at Tallahassee, the capital, this 2d day of December, A. D. 1891.

[SEAL.] JNO. L. CRAWFORD,
Secretary of State.

Mr. McPHERSON presented the memorial of Rev. W. P. Hilo and other members of the Baptist Church of Greenwich, N. J., and the memorial of Rev. Allen H. Brown and 62 other citizens of Mays Landing, N. J., remonstrating against the opening of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented the petition of W. W. Smith, principal of the Englewood (N. J.) school for boys, praying for the passage of a law directing the use of the metric system of weights and measures in the customs service; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of the P. Lorillard Company, of Jersey City, N. J., praying that section 26 of the "Act to reduce the revenue and equalize duties on imports and for other purposes" be amended; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ALLEN. I present resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of Seattle, Washington, praying that Congress, by more liberal appropriations, enable the War and Navy Departments to place our country in a thorough condition of defense, so as to be prepared to maintain its national dignity, and protect its humblest citizen in any part of the world.

This petition, Mr. President, might appropriately be referred to the Committee on Coast Defenses, the Committee on Military Affairs, or that on Naval Affairs; but as it can be referred to but one committee, I wish particularly to direct the attention of the members of these respective committees to the petition, and also to direct the attention of the Senate to it. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that these resolutions come from a part of our country which is compelled to look directly in the face every contingency and possibility of foreign war, and that within the entire area of Puget Sound, presenting some 2,000 miles of shore line, there is not a single instrument of military or naval defense to hinder a second-class cruiser of a second-class power, for a single hour, in its destructive work upon the cities and commerce of that body of water.

This is especially significant and humiliating to the people of the Northwest, in view of the fact that immediately across the line, Great Britain, with possessions insignificant compared with ours, has a strongly fortified naval station and a naval fleet constantly rendezvousing in those waters, capable of protecting the dignity and power and citizenship of that aggressive and vigilant commercial nation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What reference of the petition does the Senator desire?

Mr. ALLEN. I ask its reference to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. DAWES presented a petition of the Ashburnham Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Ashburnham, Mass., praying for the ratification of the Brussels treaty; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. QUAY presented a memorial of many church members of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the opening of the World's Columbian Fair on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented the petition of John C. Heazlitt, of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the passage of a bill granting him a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Esther Clevenger, of Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of a bill granting her a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of 41 citizens of Washington County, Pa., praying for the passage of an act of Congress subjecting oleomargarine to the provisions of the laws of the several States; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Scranton, Pa., praying for the reduction of the rate of letter postage to 1 cent per ounce; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the congregations of the various churches and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Greenville, Pa., representing over 1,800 citizens, praying that the United States coöperate with foreign powers to prohibit the slave and rum traffic in the Congo Free State, as provided for in the so-called Brussels treaty; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. COCKRELL presented a petition of the Military Order of the Loyal Legion of the United States, of St. Louis, Mo., adopted at the stated meeting of the commandery on the 2d of May, 1891, praying for the passage of legislation looking to better coast defenses; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BERRY. I present a petition of a number of citizens of the State of Washington, in regard to certain lands lying within the original grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad, which these citizens state the railroad is now claiming contrary to the intention of the forfeiture act, and they ask legislation so as to protect their homes. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1122) for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of James C. Booth, deceased, late melter and refiner of the mint of the United States at Philadelphia, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 69) for the relief of Betts, Nichols & Co., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. 606) to amend and enlarge the act approved June 18, 1878, entitled "An act to provide for the distribution of the awards made under the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico concluded on the 4th day of July, 1868," reported it without amendment.

Mr. DOLPH. From the Committee on Foreign Relations I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 539) to amend and enlarge the act approved June 18, 1878, entitled "An act to provide for the distribution of the awards made under the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico concluded on the 4th day of July, 1868."

This bill was reported by me from the Committee on Foreign Relations at the second session of the Fiftieth Congress. I made then a written report, accompanied by a large amount of testimony, taken by a subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations, concerning the matter, which was printed. The report, I think, is still on hand in the document room, and it is voluminous and costly to print. I therefore report the bill this morning without a written report, referring Senators for information to the report made in the Fiftieth Congress upon precisely the same bill. The bill was also reported favorably in the last Congress, but it was not reached on the Calendar.

I give notice of my intention to ask the Senate at the earliest practicable moment to take up the bill for consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

SILVER COINAGE.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to call up the bill introduced by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], for the free and unlimited coinage of silver.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The title of the bill will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 51) to provide for the free coinage of gold and silver bullion, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If no objection be made, the bill will be regarded as before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

UNLIMITED SILVER COINAGE AN UNLIMITED DISASTER.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, certainly I should not have attempted to make a speech at a day so early, perhaps not any time, if a silver debate had not been opened, as it has been, by the distinguished junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] in an elaborate speech, and also by a bill for the free and unlimited coinage of silver. I fear my remarks may be as much of a drug to Senators as silver itself, but the great question should have some attention; and what I esteem to be a duty, however onerous, I can not afford to shirk.

The financial instrumentalities and monetary affairs of our country are of such transcendent importance, touching not only the pocket of every citizen, but the honor and general welfare of the whole people, that it must be conceded they deserve to be discussed as questions of national gravity, and not merely as partisan or campaign topics of local or ephemeral interest. At my time of life I can have no other impulse than a desire to be right and to speak the truth as I have learned it, but this may compel me, in plainest words, to criticise what seem to me erroneous and mischievous theories, and to present such facts and arguments as appear to be conclusive in support of the public credit and that sound standard of money which will abide forever and in harmony with the money of the most enlightened Christian nations.

Permit me to say that I am now and ever have been in favor of maintaining both gold and silver in circulation, and of silver to the extremist boundary that can be maintained on a parity with gold. It would be a real joy to me to have silver greatly increase in actual value.

I did not vote for the silver act of 1890 for the reason that silver bullion was neither to be paid for nor paid out in accordance with the safer proposal of Secretary Windom, and that the silver to be purchased was fixed, as it appeared to me, at a too magnificent amount; and also that a full price would be paid for a commodity which we could neither sell nor part from, to any considerable extent, without a financial revolution and serious loss. I was not unwilling to strain a point in order to satisfy our silver friends, but they appeared to demand too much, and some seemed unlikely to be long restrained from demanding more or the whole earth. For the first time in my life I dodged the question, and did not vote against the bill, not only because my vote would not have changed the result or secured anything better, but because my distinguished friend, the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], begged me not to, and all Senators know how irresistible the Senator from Nevada can be when he chooses. I hope now—and I much regret his absence to-day—he will be ready to reciprocate, if the occasion arises, when I entreat him not to vote for free coinage.

However ingenious the legal argument of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] may be on the silver statutes, I think he will be apt to find very few able lawyers who will agree with him. The Senator denies any authority of the Government to sell bonds to obtain gold with which to redeem legal-tender United States notes, unless they were issued prior to January 1, 1879. The words of the law of 1875 are very general, directing what may be done after January 1, 1879, and apply to the unlimited redemption of outstanding legal-tender notes at any future time; and whether dated before or after, but still outstanding, would not seem to be of the slightest importance. Such technical criticism only touches the bark and does not reach the heart of the law. The Senator surely wants to be understood as in favor of the law for keeping silver on a parity with gold, but, like Ensign Stebbins, whose memory is perennial, on the liquor law, he is everlastingly against its enforcement.

The Senator also declares that the Treasury Department discriminates against silver in the payment of the public debt, but the Senator surely has been misinformed. The usage of the Department has ever been and is now to pay all creditors alike in checks, and the holders get them cashed and receive whatever they demand, whether it be paper, silver, or gold. Silver bullion, of course, is paid for in the same manner. If there is any discrimination it is not by any Government Department, and gold is as likely to be demanded and received by silver bullionists as by any other parties.

I regret that I am unable to assent to the conclusions of the leading silver Senator either on silver laws or silver policy. The path he points out for the Secretary of the Treasury to pursue—to force silver upon all Government creditors—would lead in a single day to a silver standard, and practically accomplish about the same result as would unlimited silver coinage. Believing that such a result would be an almost incurable calamity, as do the people in the North, West, and East, Republican and Democratic alike, I shall offer some reasons why the pending measure should here find no favor.

Any reference which may be made by me to the silver act of 1890 will be made for the purpose of showing that Congress then went to the ultima thule of silver legislation, and that silver adventures in seas beyond are extra hazardous. Even that legislation, as it now stands, will require modification, and can not be accepted as the settled policy of the country for coming generations. Time will show; but before going further the American people will want a reckoning to find out just where they stand, and whether silver is on top or the people. The policy of an international compact relative to silver, as slender as the outlook may appear to some of our friends, perhaps may be our safest refuge, and I hope is not to be wholly abandoned, and I can not believe it will be by the present administration.

National-bank notes are rapidly being made to step down and out to give room to silver paper. Like Naboth, they had a vineyard which Ahab wanted, and therefore were stoned and killed. The original United States notes, or greenbacks, are likely to be the next sacrifice demanded and stoned, in order to give the whole field to silver paper.

For many years we have been industriously attempting to do something to increase the market value of silver and to make it more truly, at home and abroad, one of the precious metals. To this end the force of statute laws and the coefficiency of international diplomacy resorted to again and again have thus far all ended in significant failure, and the market price of silver to-day stands at a lower figure instead of a higher than in 1878 or 1890; and as money in Europe its domain is diminishing and nowhere commands aggressive and influential supporters. This, it would seem, ought to beget some distrust about the success and omnipotence of Congress in attempting further silver experiments and dull the edge of appetite for free coinage.

We have purchased since 1878 silver to the amount of $376,925,827, and have coined over 400,000,000 of silver dollars, but the amount of silver purchased, at its present market value, shows that we have been losing heavily in the silver business, and have relieved the owners of silver bullion from a dead loss, amounting to $36,063,648, by taking this bullion off their hands. But free coinage would have involved a far greater loss, as silver since 1878 has been purchased for $71,952,390 less than its coining value; otherwise with free coinage the total loss to the Government would have been $108,016,038, and this round sum might have been added to the profits of the silver corporations.

No expedients have been untried, and no cost withheld, to push or carry silver dollars into circulation; but it has been demonstrated that no more than about sixty million dollars of over four hundred million coined can be coaxed or kicked outside the Treasury. Even had it been possible to apply hydrostatic pressure, no greater sum could have been forced into the congested channels of circulation or into the reluctant pockets of the people. The weight is objected to as too heavy and the value too light.

We hold in the Treasury to-day in silver dollars and silver bullion over twelve thousand tons which even burglars have almost ceased to covet, and only express companies appreciate its value when they lug it across the continent, but which the Government is required to hold and guard night and day, together with all forthcoming monthly additions. When and where is this silver deluge to end? In ten years more, under existing statutes, the Government may have locked up in its subterranean vaults silver to the aggregate amount of, perhaps, more than one thousand million dollars, for all of which its obligations, payable in coin, will be outstanding. Is this, like the river of the poet, to run on forever? And shall this inundation be further aggravated by unlimited free coinage?

No silver certificates, or Treasury notes issued for silver bullion, have been presented for payment in silver, but they are paid in gold when so demanded.

How long they can be thus kept on a parity with gold is already a matter of public and profound concern, and largely dependent upon an honest and proper interpretation of the law and the courage and skill of the Secretary of the Treasury. Whenever the gold in the Treasury shall vanish, and it may vanish under a cloud of silver as well as under a cloud of adverse exchanges, these certificates and notes can then be paid only in standard silver dollars, and these, as money, are known to be not worth their face value. As security for silver certificates or Treasury notes, which are to circulate at par with gold, they are notoriously inadequate, as 412½ grains of silver, nine-tenths fine, will fetch no more than 74 cents. It would be hardly less safe, and certainly equally honest, to base such certificates and notes, and circulate them as good money, upon iron or copper, or upon wheat or tobacco, purchased and accumulated in like manner, at 33⅓ per cent above the market value, as to base such circulation upon the so-called standard silver dollars under free coinage.

Whatever advantage from unlimited free coinage of silver may accrue to corporate owners of silver mines, when gold advances to a premium, will be brief and not permanent, as then no Secretary of the Treasury would be willing to sell United States bonds in order to obtain gold to keep any paper currency paid out for silver on a parity with gold. These corporations, therefore, at no remote period would have their own drug return to plague the inventors, and find silver certificates or Treasury notes received for silver bullion, when unsupported by gold, of no greater value than that of the silver contained in the free-coined silver dollar. They will not be able then by any shift to fare much better than other classes of our people. It will not mitigate the sufferings of innocent people, however, that the corporate owners of silver mines will sooner have come to grief from their own prescription than would have been possible from any other source.

Of course some of our excellent argentiferous friends sincerely imagine that they can secure forever by free coinage all the difference there may be between the real or commercial value of 371¼ grains of pure silver and the legal-tender or par value of the silver dollar, now amounting to 3¾ per cent, no matter how wide that difference may be; but they would be more likely to find their last days worse than the first, as silver dollars, when no longer upheld and supported by gold, as they long have been, could not fail to sink to about the level of their commercial value as silver bullion. Real money must stand the test of the world's melting pot. The Mexican dollar, with more of silver than our own, is here worth only its weight as bullion. The coining of silver will add nothing to its real value, and, like any other commodity produced in excess of the demand, its value must be largely regulated and determined by the average cost of its production. The boundless profits of the corporate mine owners might not then be so conspicuous, but even then fat dividends would not become wholly extinct, as the rich mines, bearing no brother near their throne, might kill off the lean, and diminish competition.

The experiment which is now being made to have our Government purchase, on compulsion, a fixed monthly amount of silver has, I fear, complicated and more or less retarded any international compact relative to silver, and perhaps contributed to the degredation of its value by largely restricting the demand to one country alone, and by the practical exclusion of any popular demand from any other. The menace of unlimited coinage, with the swelling accumulations of coined and uncoined silver in the Treasury, which may, in some financial contingency, be thrust upon any or all other markets, not only tends to perpetuate its present uncertainty of value, but may further tend to sink it to a lower deep. Certainly unlimited coinage would indefinitely postpone all hope of an international compact.

Some very able prosilver men, most absurdly, as it appears to me, claim that the late wider difference between the value of gold and silver has arisen from an advance in the value of gold, and not from the depreciation of silver, but this pathetic fallacy is at once and forever refuted by the infallible standard of labor, which offers its testimony over a large part of the whole world that it now receives from 33⅓ to 50 per cent higher wages in gold or its equivalent than was received thirty years ago, though I shall not deny that the wages of laboring men have not thus advanced in any country where silver is the standard currency. The mint price of gold in London is now the same as it was in 1776, that is to say, £3 17*s.* 10½*d.* per ounce. Nowhere else is it worth any more. This is some proof of its permanent commercial stability, and of its unchanging standard of value. English statisticians assert that gold has depreciated, and that a gold guinea will not now purchase so much of the necessaries of life by 20 per cent as it would a few years ago.

It is true that prices of many commodities have fallen because they are now produced with less labor by the more universal use of improved machinery and of steam power. Silver, also, has been made cheap, not only by the boundless productiveness of new bonanza mines, but by wonderful American improvements in science and mechanic arts upon the rude and primitive mining methods of Potosi, Peru, and Mexico. The cost of production, like that of copper, nickel, and iron, as well as salt, and sugar, has been very largely reduced. The total product of silver has, therefore, been vastly increased and its commercial value correspondingly diminished.

In 1854, according to the Director of the Mint, the annual silver product of the world amounted to $40,000,000, but in 1890 it had swollen to $166,667,000, or over four times the product of 1854. Will any learned Senator contend that this enormous and unprecedented increase of silver has not had the usual and inexorable effect of diminishing its current value? John Locke in 1690 stated that silver had fallen seven-tenths since Henry VII, in consequence of the amount poured in from America. When the world's stock of silver for twenty-five years had barely increased annually $11,000,000, Adam Smith says, it fell to one-third of its previous value. Neither Locke nor Smith were unfriendly to silver. I leave the tyros of 1891 to adjust any differences with the renowned authorities of 1690 and 1776 as to the effect of a largely increased supply upon the value of silver. The world in earlier times accepted the facts, and we can not escape or dodge the insurmountable facts in the history of the present silver era.

The depreciation of silver has been accelerated not only by its greatly increased abundance, but also by its diminished use as money by leading commercial nations. On a gold standard Great Britain is the center and mistress of the money exchanges of all the world. Germany, changing from silver to gold, has a large unredeemed stock of antiquated coins yet to be disposed of; and France is no longer a buyer of silver, and has not been since 1873. No European nation now opens its mints to the free coinage of silver, but all are fighting shy of it, and only tolerate it as subsidiary coinage. Even in Mexico it is subject to a heavy tax of seigniorage of about 4½ per cent. The drain of silver to India, where formerly nearly one-third of the world's total product was annually absorbed, has not yet ceased, though apparently this year diminishing, and will not wholly cease so long as wheat, cotton, and other products can there be bought with silver; but India, like the United States, is beginning to learn that it is buying an elephant.

The total output of silver, including the large increase in Mexico and Bolivia, Australia and the United States, has more than doubled, even since 1873, while the legitimate demand for it, though intrepidly and ostentatiously promoted by the United States, appears to have fallen off elsewhere more than one-half. The law of demand and supply is as autocratic as that of gravitation, and silver is not exempt from its all-pervading power.

Keeping in step with the great stride of our silver act of 1890, the discoveries of new silver mines in 1891 are reported to be as phenomenal in their extent and fertility as were the discoveries of our gold mines in 1847, and some of the ledges are reported to yield from one thousand to four thousand dollars per ton. A California magazine declares, "It would seem that the old expensive silver mines will be closed up by these new, rich, and easily worked mines." The opening of the rich Lake Superior copper mines, it will not have been forgotten, at once immensely reduced the commercial value of copper. When there is a large overproduction of corn on the prairies the price goes down, and so low that it is used even for fuel. The several million bales of cotton we have raised this year probably will be sold for less than would have been a crop of only five or six million of bales. Is it any wonder that the value of silver has depreciated? On the contrary, the wonder will be if there should not be a further depreciation. If by chance the output of silver should be diminished by one third, most likely the total value to the silver producers would suffer no diminution.

Silver is a large product of our thrifty silver States, happily not dominant in all, but is doubtless more remunerative, and likely so to continue, than any other mining product, or any product of agriculture or of manufactures. The Granite Mountain Company in Montana, one of the largest, obtains silver, as has been authoritatively reported, at a cost of 14 cents per ounce. But the same authority states the average mining cost of silver from American mines at 51 cents per ounce, while it brings now, even in the season of its great depression, nearly one dollar, or 94 cents per ounce. That is to say, it fetches in all markets almost double the first cost. No other industry offers such dazzling money-making attractions.

The great silver corporations, however, are eager for more. By existing law the United States Government has been buying and is bound to buy silver at its going market price to an amount about equal to the total production of the American mines, leaving consumption for the arts almost wholly dependent upon a foreign snpply. No other industry claims such rotund and gigantic protection. Considered as an industrial American product, I should not haggle about nor begrudge it full and ample protection to the capital and labor employed; but silver miners have no promise of an increase of wages in case of the free coinage of silver, and silver as a standard of money must, for all the world, stand or fall upon its intrinsic merits, and not upon the merits of the place whence it comes.

The silver propagandists, of whom the president of the Montana Granite Mountain Company, Mr. Rumsey, appears to be an honored and distinguished member, from their abounding resources, maintain here year after year an expensive literary and oratorical bureau to propagate and disseminate their silver theories and financial dogmas.

They innocently declare, with one eyebrow drawn up and the other drawn down, that they only seek to have silver placed on an equality with gold, knowing, as they do, that their inequality has been displayed from age to age, and is as wide as that between the sun and moon, and that silver for many years appears to have been aping our unstable satellite by its restless monthly changes. If they did not suppose that free coinage of silver would give it supremacy and banish gold from circulation it would be safe to believe their love for the silver dollar would disappear as swiftly as the light from a falling star. No anarchist has oftener denounced gold and gold bugs, or with a deadlier hate, than the ultra partisans of silver. Their devotion to silver is shown by swearing at gold. The transparent design appears to be to bring silver in America to the front as a lower and cheaper standard of money, with which to buy and sell, as the sole measure of debts, and as a more tempting and sinister inducement to the debtor class to follow a treacherous lead.

Whether or not the measure would be honest or honorable on the part of the Government in relation to all existing contracts, they do not care to discuss, nor even to consider who the debtors really are. When they are found it would be discovered that the great corporations are the largest debtors of the conntry. The bonded and other indebtedness of our railroad corporations is enormous, and amounts to $5,753,541,542, or about six times that of our national debt. The indebtedness of our savings banks, loan and trust companies, and other banks, to a great multitude of depositors, mainly for laboriously accumulated savings, in the aggregate amount to $2,539,256,699. These are the parties to whom is to be offered the cheaper money with which to discharge obligations incurred upon a gold standard, often to those whose sole surplus is the lone deposit in a savings bank. It will be seen that it is very largely the great corporations which would reap where they have not sown.

The fact that all laborers, whether working by the day, month, or year, belong practically to the creditor class, is also stealthily ignored; but American men and women are not easily hypnotized, and would soon learn the difference in the value of their wages when received and expended under a silver standard.

The silver-tongued orators promise to give us silver as cheaper money, and in the next breath promise to bring it up to the par of gold. Somebody is to be cheated. Who is it? One promise or the other must prove false.

The slanderous tales concerning the amount of mortgage indebtedness of farmers turns out to have been a wicked exaggeration or a big lie based on a little truth. The major part of such mortgages has been made with the deliberate foresight of buying and holding land for its increment or for its future increase of value; and the parties, for the most part, will not be disappointed. The old custom of fifty years ago among farmers of barter or of a running account with merchants, payable at the close of the year in truck or by promissory note, is obsolete, and for whatever farmers have to buy or sell payment is now nearly always made with cash on the spot. A careful investigation would show that there are in almost every State more farmers having debts due to them than there are farms encumbered by mortgages; and there is no class of our community more industrious and economical or more obedient to the gospel of St. Paul, "Owe no man anything," than that of the farmer.

Finally, this silver bureau threatens the country desperately as an extract from one of their circulars will show, as follows:

> That if silver can not be remonetized, gold will be demonetized and paper substituted for both gold and silver. The people will not be destroyed for want of money. The gold trust, by rejecting one of the precious metals, has taught how both may be rejected. The radicalism for contraction is in danger of being met by a radicalism for inflation.

The impotence of this rather blustering threat will be apparent when it is remembered that the fiat paper money party, which proposed to pay the public debt in paper, left neither heirs nor estate to perpetuate its brood or its lunatic memory. Its quackery is also made conspicuous by the assumption of supreme power to do whatever of harm or mischief they choose, and by the declared purpose, if they can not have silver they will not have gold, but will jump to nonmetallic money aud inflate the country with a flimsy flood of unredeemable fiat paper money. If the bad is not to be had, then, copying from Milton's Satan, "Evil be thou my good," they propose to have the worst. If they can not have the measles, then they will have the smallpox; and if they can not go to purgatory they will go to Hades.

While the bold pretense is made that there is a lack of money in circulation, unquestionably the foremost effect of unlimited free coinage of silver would be a premium on gold which would prompt its universal withdrawal from circulation, and thereby produce a real and fundamental lack of money in all parts of our country; creating a stringency of greater severity, perhaps, than any hitherto known. The passage of such an act would be the danger signal for everyone to "save himself who can" and thus inoculate the malady it set out to cure. Gold-hoarding would become a national epidemic. The payment of gold certificates would be swiftly demanded at the Treasury by the holders. United States notes would be sent there in flocks for redemption, and the hundred million redemption fund might grow beautifully less and be soon exhausted, leaving two hundred and forty-six millions unredeemed, as well as the whole series of silver certificates and Treasury notes, with nothing in sight for their redemption but the 74-cent silver dollar. Certainly our gold eagles, snubbed at home, would go abroad where more justly appreciated. The withdrawal of our present national stock of six hundred and seventy millions of gold, being larger than our present stock of silver, from the money in circulation, could not fail to create such a stringency and financial distress as no lover of his country would wish to behold. The superior value of gold abroad, attracting a brisk exportation, would produce a large contraction, not only of the money for ordinary home business but the demand for gold contracts could only be supplied by the payment of extraordinary premiums.

With robust audacity and obstinate misinformation some of the silver organs still assume that there is a great want of money in our country, when in truth money here has never been more abundant nor more in circulation per capita than at the present time, and it is also increasing at the rate of sixty millions annually, having increased since 1889 over $120,000,000. The increase in the month of October last was over thirty millions. There is in circulation as money more than twice as much as we had in 1878. We then had $729,132,634, compared with July 1, 1891, when we had $1,500,067,555, not including any part of what was held in the Treasury. The circulation per capita in 1878 was $15.32 against $24.35 December 1, 1891, or greater than in the most prosperous years of our history. Even with our extraordinary crops of the present year of corn and wheat, of cotton and tobacco, there is no visible lack of money in any quarter to move these vast crops to market. These simple but indisputable facts show how easily the hysterical tears for the want of money can be made to dry up.

From the universal American habit among all business men of using their own checks, on banks where they have deposits, as substitutes for money, there is less of legal-tender money used or required per capita in the United States, in proportion to its immense business, than in any other country of the world. Nearly every smart town in the country has its bank. The bank credits subject to check April, 1891, were $2,604,000,000, and savings banks deposits subject to check, with various conditions, were $1,524,000,000. Together these institutions furnish a basis for checks in lieu of money of individuals and firms, greatly exceeding all the coin and paper money in circulation. It has been repeatedly shown that the daily use of such checks actually covers more than 90 per cent of all business transactions.

But with unlimited coinage of silver, who would get the first grip of the increased amount of paper money issued to pay for it? Not the merchant, not the blacksmith, and not the farmer, but only those having silver to present to the mint and demand it.

There is now apparently no scarcity of money among those who have anything to sell or exchange for it, and borrowers are really most troubled, I fear, by a scarcity of collateral.

No loud lamentations for more money were heard until the silver mines began to overstock all silver markets, and then the silver bullionists, assuming the vicarious attitude of sorrowful debtors, began a doleful wailing about the great want of more money, and especially the want of silver money. No other would stop the raging hunger. The "no small stir" of Demetrius, the silversmith, shouting, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians," was made not so much in reverence to the goddess as from fear that the teaching of the Apostle Paul, adverse to gods made with hands, would deprive the craftsmen of a market offering much wealth in the making of silver images; but shouts of "Great is Diana" no longer anywhere create even a small stir. When the ass, according to Æsop, put on the lion's skin, the fox having heard his voice, said, "Well, to be sure! and I should have been frightened too, if I had not heard the bray." The most vociferous shouts for more money come forth from the mouth of silver mines, and with a sonorous metallic ring that frightens nobody.

No age of the world has been exempt from dreamers and demagogues, and at the present time the United States, perhaps, has no more than its legitimate proportion of such pests, which like grasshoppers in the field, as has been said, make more noise there than large oxen. Their highest political importance is generally achieved as a third party, or as a Swiss contingent, ready to enlist as an ally with any existing party that will yield the most to the upbuilding of air castles or to the pulling down of solid temples. The "third party" is ever ambitious to be a makeweight, and wherever it moves it expects the other side of the world to tip up.

The impression prevails among sober-thinking men at home and abroad that the sound financial system of the United States, maintained in harmony with that of great commercial nations through the first century of its existence, is in danger of being supplanted by Utopian schemes, either fraudulent or fantastic, and wholly based on slippery foundations.

The two old political parties are more or less imperiled by the unknown strength of new parties, which promise many votes for a few platform promises. The organized agitation of the subtreasury loaning scheme of the Farmers' Alliance on land and staple crops, and of unlimited silver coinage of the silver bullionists, creates the chief existing distrust concerning our future political and industrial career. How these reckless schemes may be finally determined by party exigencies and how they will affect public and private credit are unsolved problems that now rest as an oppressive incubus upon the mercantile and industrial interests of the country. This should be our golden age, and it will be unless we stumble and make it only a silver age. Peace with all the world, with abundant crops and ample prices, should have left no cloud over the American continent. Dynamite may not bring rain from the clouds, but the schemes of financial balloonists will not fail to bring portentous monetary storms upon our people.

The Farmers' Alliance scheme for issuing legal-tender paper and loaning it by the Government on land mortgages would be only a stale repetition of the John Law experiment, anciently most expensively tried, and whenever tried ending in ignominious failure and bringing overwhelming disaster upon the government as well as upon the borrowers of the cheap paper money. It is a banking scheme without capital, with the government as guarantor of all borrowers. This old and exploded scheme was recently again conspicuously tried by the Argentine Republic, perhaps the richest country in South America, and there it has bankrupted the Government and fixed an indelible stain upon the good name of the people. Argentine credit is apparently ruined, public and private, and the premium there on gold is 250 per cent, and daily expected to advance. The lesson of cheap money by banking and bond repudiation of Mississippi also still lingers in the public memory. Notwithstanding the high character of some worthy indorsers, any party or faction of a party which proffers aid and hospitality to such wild schemes, at war with the prosperity of our country, will be apt at an early day to disavow and deny the connection, like Peter, with an oath.

Our geographical position, facilities of intercommunication with all parts of the habitable world, and the superior magnitude of our agricultural, mineral, and manufacturing industries have often suggested New York as a more appropriate site for the center and settlement of the exchanges of the world than London, the capital of a country where two-thirds of the whole population would starve but for the regular supply of foreign food. Producing here, as we do, more coal, iron, copper, cotton, wheat, corn, silver, and gold than any other country, American ambition for preëminence also in national monetary affairs was natural, and its gratification has appeared unlikely to be long deferred. The number of vessels already entering the port of New York is hardly less than those at the port of London. Why should the trade and commerce of the whole world be compelled to send its bills of exchange for the final adjustment of all accounts through the British Channel, Straits of Dover, and up the North Sea to a port at the fifty-first degree of north latitude, when there is the much finer port and harbor of New York on the western breast of the Atlantic, 11° further south? Laudable as may have been the ambition, any possibility of its fruition will have been forever extinguished unless the American standard of money can be kept not inferior to that of other great commercial nations.

It has been suggested that the free coinage of silver might be limited to the American production, as if that would be enough to remove all objections, when obviously it is the excessive and ever-increasing redundance of the American production which chiefly creates the world's embarrassment, and now seriously confronts and embarrasses the United States. Our home consumption might give some relief to the dread of a silver overflow in foreign nations, but the exclusion of foreign silver here would be hardly a drop in the bucket, and give no relief to the fact that we have a remarkably obtrusive overflow of our own. If 5 grains of opium would kill the victim, what would he care that the dose could not be increased to 6 grains, nor be administered by a foreigner? Practically, however, the limitation would not limit. Illicit silver would win its way "where seraphs might despair."

The proposition in effect would ask Congress to renounce its constitutional power to coin money and regulate its value, and to confer these functions upon the silver mining corporations, leaving them to run the mints at our expense, and compelling the Government to coin and pay for the entire annual silver production of these great corporations, however large the amount and whatever its value, regardless of the wants of commerce or of the people. As our late honored associate, Judge Thurman, would say, "It won't do."

For the monthly purchase of 4,500,000 ounces of silver, or 54,000,000 ounces yearly, the Treasury Department issues legal-tender Treasury notes, inflating the currency in circulation at the high pressure of fifty or sixty million dollars per annum, greatly in excess of the annual increase of population; and this paper dollar has, in fact, less than three-fourths of the silver bullion purchased behind it as security for its redemption, although the Government is pledged to redeem it in coin, either gold or silver, but entirely at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury. It is, of course, receivable at par for public lands, internal revenue, and for all duties on imports. We have hitherto been able to float all of the diverse and multitudinous varieties of our legal-tender paper now in circulation at par with gold because our stock of gold has been large, and also because exchanges arising from foreign trade have generally been in our favor. We have, therefore, kept at home not merely the American product of gold, but have made the gold of other nations tributary to our resources. Unlimited coinage of silver would give us only 371¼ grains of pure silver in the dollar, while at its present price of 94 cents per ounce we buy 510 grains for a dollar, and yet the redemption of all legal-tender paper, when paid in silver, will be paid, as it can be now, with a dollar containing only 371¼ grains of pure silver, equal to 412½ grains of silver nine-tenths fine, at present valued at 74 cents.

Free coinage is a naked proposition by which to throw the loss by the existing and palpable depreciation of silver from the silver corporations, first upon the Government and then upon the whole public. The Government is to issue its promissory notes of a dollar for every 371¼ grains of pure silver brought to its mints. Ultimately these notes, being legal tender, will circulate and get into the hands of the people, whom the Government will be powerless to shield from bearing the final and main brunt of silver depreciation.

The United States product of silver in 1890 was 54,500,000 ounces, and its coinage value was $70,464,645. The deposits and purchases of silver last year aggregated 71,840,663 standard ounces, of the coinage value of $83,630,154. Beyond the American product therefore, it will be seen that there has been and will be a serious influx of foreign silver to be reckoned in any unlimited free coinage account. The idea that we could maintain such an annual increase of silver dollars on a parity with gold would seem to be only worthy of those who have faith in looking for a silver spoon at the end of every rainbow.

No advocate of unlimited coinage of silver will be likely to claim that our standard silver dollar would have in any other country a value exceeding that of its weight as silver bullion, and America would thus have opened her mints, as the greatest goose of the age, to be plucked at will. Our action on silver would have equal potency in India to that of the Pope's bull on the comet, and no more. The idea that the United States alone can by any legislative necromancy lift the value of $3,810,000,000 of silver throughout the world to a parity with gold would be a miracle too great to find acceptance until after the exit of the nineteenth century. While nearly all business men to be met with, having a real daily use for money, and no matter to what political party attached, understand and protest against unlimited silver coinage, how long would the great mass of our people, with whom business men are in constant touch, be likely to be contented with or humbugged by it? With free and unlimited coinage of both gold and silver, what owner of gold bullion would take it to a mint of the United States, when gold coin is worth no more than gold bullion, and receive back coins for circulation in the same truckle-bed with silver of 25 to 30 per cent less value? If any one went, he would go like the schoolboy, "whistling aloud to keep his courage up," and such visits would be few and far between.

Our European rivals in wealth and power are eager to clutch the large possessions of gold we have so long firmly held, and which they fondly hope we are by some queer suicidal blunder about to part from forever. The astute governments of Europe, with sound financial discretion, tolerate silver, and a good deal of silver, but only as subsidiary coinage; and while they may admit that American enterprise has accomplished many Herculean tasks they have no faith in our annual output of sixty or eighty millions of paper money on a basis of silver, and still less faith that America alone can by unlimited free coinage increase either the value or the stability of silver, but, if attempted, they are persuaded that Brother Jonathan will have put on the poisoned shirt of Nessus, and they look upon the impending closure of our career in Herculean enterprises with sublime complacency.

It appears to me that unlimited coinage of silver by the United States alone is pregnant with the exile of gold and dire financial calamities. As the experience of all the leading nations has demonstrated, gold is the most potential monetary instrumentality yet discovered by man. In a memorable speech of the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] in 1874, its merits were eloquently set forth as follows:

So exact a measure is it of human effort that when it is exclusively used as money it teaches the very habit of honesty. It neither deals in nor tolerates false pretenses. It can not lie. It keeps its promises to rich and poor alike.

Let me add that without gold to uphold such money as we now have in circulation, American industries, commerce, and character would all be sure to suffer a sad decadence, and the Republic itself would drop from the elevated rank it now holds among nations.

The silver measure of the last Congress, as it appears to me, was a very broad and possibly a very extravagant concession to the great corporations owning American silver mines, and too nearly approaching the dangerous line of doing too much. Experience may show some conservative modifications to be imperative. And yet some of the silver advocates are not satisfied, and insist upon something even more extravagant than the original act. The silver corporations, decorated and to be decorated with numerous foreign stockholders, hunger for still larger gains. One-half sheer profit in the production of silver only whets the appetite for more. They want the Government to give them free coinage, which will be about 33½ per cent above the market value of silver bullion, and also to bear the cost of coinage and the responsibility of all further depreciation of silver, by hoarding it until at the last syllable of recorded time it shall "melt with fervent heat."

But if their supreme demand of free and unlimited coinage were to be granted, they would not be persuaded to accept silver certificates or silver dollars in payment for silver, even after the Government shall have been subjected to the expense of its coinage. The dollar, as they think, will be good enough for other people but not good enough to pay for silver bullion. They, like some doctors who have a panacea for all the ills of humanity, will not take their own medicine, but will refuse the dollar with which they urge the Government to flood the country. They insist upon having something better. The Government will be required to hold forever not only the dead weight now stored in the overladen vaults of the Treasury, but also the future daily additions thereto from all sources, foreign and domestic. We are to take it not because the Government wants it, but because nobody wants it.

The Gresham law that the cheaper will drive out the dearer wherever there is any attempt to make one standard out of two metals is one the "eternal verities," and illustrates the homely truth of the old adage that "if two ride a horse one must ride behind." This has been often illustrated in our own history of gold and silver.

Not one of the mints of Europe is now open to the free coinage of silver, but silver is kept as subsidiary circulation in large amounts, as we have kept it, at par with gold, although the ratio of value has fallen from 15½ to 22 of silver to 1 of gold.

India, with its 250,000,000 of population, so woefully imposed upon and bled by the depreciation and instability of silver, has begun already to threaten through its learned Hindoo newspapers to wholly demonetize it. Some of these British subjects do not feel happy in being indirectly plundered by the silver standard, even by their imperial mother-in-law. India is more likely in the coming century to seek for more gold than is Great Britain to seek for much more silver. The continuance of a measureless demand for silver in India can no longer be confidently relied upon.

The fluctuations of the value of silver, inherent and characteristic, come down to us by continuous report from ancient ages. It has always been unstable. By the law of Menes, king of Egypt, the value of gold was fixed at 2½ times that of silver. In the time of Solomon silver was so abundant as to be accounted as nothing, and in Ecbatana the tiles on the roofs of temples were said to be of solid silver. In the fifth century the ratio of gold was 6 to 8 times that of silver. In Greece it was, according to Plato, 10 to 1. During the middle ages and down to the sixteenth century the ratio was from 10 to 13 to 1, but was most often 10 to 1. The discovery of the silver mines in the new world brought down silver to the ratio of 16 to 1. Since 1873 the product of silver has doubled, and the actual ratio of silver is now only 22 to 1 of gold.

During and after our silver legislation of 1890 the price of silver went up from 43⅞*d.* per ounce in March to 54⅛*d.* per ounce in August. On a silver standard it would have cost 23 per cent more to have paid a debt in August than in March. A few alert speculators who purchased silver bullion prior to this legislation and sold early thereafter may have made it a paying business. The price is now down again to 43⅞*d.* per ounce. For the immense increase of the product the world finds little use at the former valuation. Only at a lower rate can it be utilized.

While all of its revenues are raised in silver, India is annually required to pay or spend in England $75,000,000 in gold, a sum which costs India, in its silver revenue, $112,500,000.

We are often told how England buys wheat and cotton in India and pays for it with silver rupees at 48 cents which cost in England only 33 cents, being an advantage of 15 cents on each rupee over the wheat and cotton growers of India, resulting from their standard of silver. Is it not clear that with the primacy of a silver currency America would be as much handicapped as India, and that American wheat, tobacco, cotton, or anything else here might then be bought with the same advantage of cheap silver that Great Britain now finds so prosperous in India? No farmers will want to receive for their cotton or tobacco, wheat or corn, cattle or horses, payment in dollars not as good as any other dollar. If there is one class more interested in a sound currency than any other it is that of the farmer, whose prosperity depends upon what he gets for his annual crops; and good farmers always have more to sell than to buy. Even the class that works the shortest hours for a day's work will not want to be paid in a short dollar.

The brazen-faced political untruth, limping with decrepitude, is still put forth, though refuted for the hundredth time, that somebody was grievously wronged in 1873, when the silver dollar was discontinued from our coinage, but it will not be forgotten that no debt-payer could then have been wronged, as all debts might then have been paid in gold at 3 per cent less than in silver, and for six years after 1873 all debts were payable in legal-tender United States notes, though at a large discount below the standard of gold, and after resumption in 1879 they might have been paid in silver, paper, or gold, the latter only being required by law until 1878 for customs. It is true that no one, even among silver producers, anticipated in 1873 that within ten years silver would become so abundant as to radically change its relative value. Since that date we have often coined more silver dollars in six months than were coined in the whole previous existence of the Government mints, and they are a legal tender, but nobody seems willing to take them unless the Government stands ready to gloss or exchange them for something more desirable. They are flatly uncurrent on the Rialto.

When silver separates from and ceases to be supported by gold, as it long has been supported, and drops to its intrinsic value only, all of our American productions which need protection will suddenly find the tariff out of joint and its efficiency undermined by the privilege offered to importers of foreign merchandise to pay duties in cheap silver. They could buy bullion, have it coined free, and tender it for all customs dues. This would be tantamount to a horizontal reduction of all rates of duty, and whatever the difference may be between the standards of gold and silver, to the extent of that difference, whether 25 or 50 per cent, there will arise an absolute and wholly illegitimate reduction of the tariff on foreign imports. With the present wages of labor it would close up every mine (silver excepted) and factory in our country.

The condition of the United States Government, however, would be the reverse of that of the importers, and call for more money instead of less in nearly every branch of its expenditures. New resources of revenue would have to be exploited, and, if cheap money should be found to annually expand Government expenditures to the extent of one hundred millions, Poor Richard might say we had paid too dear for the silver whistle.

Inflation with a depreciating currency is no remedy for any lack of money, as it requires a progressive increase for a like amount of business, or a new perpetual inflation to cure the old.

Our whole superstructure of credits would be dislocated. No parties would loan money at lawful rates of interest if threatened with a large loss in the principal by an ultimate payment in a lower standard of money. Special conditions would be required in all loans, as well as in all sales of real estate or of merchandise, specifying whether payments were to be made in the standard of gold or of silver. Foreign trade would buy with gold and sell for silver, and be subject to the charge and unceasing vacillation of exchange, and all exchange would be tributary to London. Home enterprises, especially of our new States, yet only in the gristle, would be stricken with paralysis. There would be an era of suspended animation in all business before the new régime of silver would be understood, computed, and adjusted. Railroads, to cover running expenses, would be compelled to increase freight and passenger rates. Rentals would be promptly advanced. Salaries of judges, civil officers, and legislators, State and national, would often be found inadequate and demand immediate relief. Workingmen could not fail to discover the cheapness of the silver dollar, and strikes for better wages or better pay would become contagious. Farmers would calculate not only the value of wheat, but also the value of the money offered for it.

The exportation of over seventy millions of gold in the six months ending with July last is admonitory of what may happen in larger measure whenever the conviction becomes rooted that gold is to be superseded and that silver is to have the primacy in the money standard of the United States.

Formerly a considerable amount of silver was annually exported, the excess of exports over imports being for the last fifteen years over $144,000,000, but now, with a largely increased product, exports have greatly diminished, and the Government under free coinage would be in a worse plight than it is in now when only bound to run in debt annually for, and to hoard and keep out of all markets, 54,000,000 ounces of silver. The result of free coinage must be an annual decrease of the aggregate amount of our exports, and any deficiency of exports must be supplied by gold.

There are also more or less millions of American stocks and securities generally held abroad, though far less at this time than formerly, and any war panic or monetary pressure abroad or any distrust of the American standard of money and credit can not fail to send such stocks and securities home to our markets by the swiftest "greyhounds of the ocean" to be sold for whatever they may fetch.

The sixty to seventy-five thousand of our American travelers abroad probably require annually about seventy-five millions of gold for traveling expenses, and other disbursements, especially those for the usual bric-a-brac to be brought home. This is a large and sorry drain which finds some, but rather diluted, compensation in the reciprocity of foreign travelers in the United States, and it may be added that of the half million immigrants annually arriving not all are paupers, lepers, or anarchists, but some portion of them doubtless bring with them funds amounting in the aggregate to several millions of gold. The balance against our country may be moderately estimated, however, at not less than fifty millions.

About two-thirds of our foreign carrying trade is done under foreign flags, and the cost of the freight to be paid out of American funds is supposed to exceed $100,000,000. This, too, is a serious drain upon our resources, but it may not cease until some other industries on land shall be comparatively less remunerative, and certainly not until ocean mail service shall be treated with equal favor to that on land.

The nations formerly belonging to the Latin Union, together with Germany and Great Britain, after the advent of free coinage, could no longer be asked by us to unite in an international compact to resist the further decline in the value of silver, but would find their interests perhaps better subserved by the gold standard. Free silver coinage by the United States means not only the absorption of the world's surplus of silver, but the relinquishment of our stock of six hundred and seventy millions of gold, as well as our annual product, which would at once find a European welcome and relieve several nations there of a financial dilemma.

With free coinage of silver once established there can be no hope of future escape from it. There will be no road left open for retreat. Whatever the degradation of our condition may be we shall have no allies volunteering to lift us out of the Serbonian bog. The Government could not afford to reform its millions of silver currency by redemption or by its replacement with anything better. Nor would it be just to our people, after all debts were based upon a depreciated standard, to compel payment in a higher standard. The descent is easy, but to return, that is work.

Should we at any time find the silver standard disastrous, and an insupportable impediment to the prosperity of the great American Republic, what could be done with our vast stock on hand of silver? If we did not want it, who would take it? Not having been able to bull the market, we might doubtless succeed better as the great bear in the market, and by unloading, even some modest part of our ponderous burden, make a big break in all silver markets. Were any great exigency to arise in our national affairs that should compel us to throw even a tenth part of our millions of dollars of silver upon the cloyed markets of the world, the price would go down "from morn till noon and from noon till dewy eve," when, instead of the ratio of 16 to 1 of gold, it might drop to no more than its mining cost, or show a relative value of only 35 to 1 of gold.

Legislators may draw wisdom from the past and show some prescience of the future, but must not be unmindful of the existing condition of affairs. Measures that once might have been helpful, by changed conditions may now be very harmful. Years ago we had a large preponderance in the product of gold and little or no silver. To-day there is a large preponderance of silver, and beyond our annual product of about thirty-three millions of gold we have no available resources to compete with our unlimited production of silver. Until 1878 our law provided that all duties on foreign imports must be paid in gold, and that source annually yielded a most useful and important supply; but all that ceased as a legal requirement with the legislation of 1878, and silver became as much a legal tender as gold. Whenever silver obtains the supremacy any balance of foreign trade against us would go out in gold; but when in our favor it would come in silver. No one but a chronic dreamer can believe that it would be possible, with resources so slender and crippled, to maintain our silver coinage on a parity with gold. On the lower standard of silver all the exportable surplus of our staple crops would of course be paid for in silver, and therefore the balance of foreign trade would not often be in our favor.

I have attempted to demonstrate, first: That the depreciation of silver is both so great and universal that unlimited coinage could not be maintained on the present standard with gold, but would suddenly wreck the country by a silver revolution.

Second. That unlimited coinage would interdict all international silver compacts.

Third. That there is no scarcity of money in circulation, but instead the amount is twice as great as it was in 1878, and is increasing on a canter.

Fourth. That a silver standard would be equivalent to a horizontal reduction of the tariff of 25 per cent, if not more, and an equal reduction of all pensions.

Fifth. That the enormous increase of silver to the extent of four times the product of 1854, coincident with a greatly lessened demand for it, has so depreciated its value that unlimited coinage by the United States must prove a disastrous national blunder.

Sixth. That there is no magic in any law of Congress which can make the world accept an ounce of silver as worth any more in coin than in bullion.

Seventh. That the parties to first profit by free coinage would be the corporate owners of silver mines only, and the parties to finally suffer the largest losses by it would be the great mass of our people, into whose hands the depreciated coin and Treasury notes would finally pass.

The public credit of our great Republic is at stake. Shall we have the best money standard of the foremost nations of mankind, or shall we descend to the flickering and narrow gauge of silver only for the conduct of a greater home and foreign trade than that of any other people, ancient or modern? We have paid off more than three-fourths of our great war debt in gold when our resources were far less than now, and I am unwilling to forfeit our well-earned reputation and lose public confidence and all the ancestral prestige of our history by paying the sorry remnant of this debt in a legal tender of much less value.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not rise to enter into any general discussion of the silver question. I propose for a few moments to call the attention of the Senate to the charge which is made by the Senator from Vermont and also by the President in his annual message, that the act of July 14, 1890, is the work of the bimetallists in Congress.

I want to say that the act of 1890, for which I voted (or, at least, if I did not vote actually I was paired so that my vote counted), was not the product of the silver people, but, on the other hand, it was brought to us from a committee that has been known for many years to be deadly hostile to bimetallism, practically at least. I know the Senator who has just taken his seat says that he is a bimetallist, and the President says in his message that he is, and yet they are bimetallists of the character who are always satisfied with being bimetallists in words and never in acts, and they proceed as far as resolutions but never to deeds.

I do not intend to quarrel with the act of 1890, but I do intend to show in a moment that it is not a silver act. It was a money act, and, as such, it received in this body the approval of sixteen Senators who had voted for free coinage. It received the condemnation of twenty-five men in this Chamber who had voted for free coinage. The President in his message, speaking of the silver question, says:

> Before the influence of the prospective silver legislation was felt in the market silver was worth in New York about $0.955 per ounce. The ablest advocates of free coinage in the last Congress were most confident in their predictions that the purchases by the Government required by the law would at once bring the price of silver to $1.2929 per ounce.

Mr. President, I was a careful listener and observer of everything that took place during that extended debate. I have, with as much care as possible, gone over the records of that debate. I challenge the Executive, I challenge anybody who makes that assertion, to find that more than one Senator in this body who was in favor of free coinage ever intimated that the act of 1890 would bring silver to par. On the other hand, more than twenty men in this Chamber asserted that it would not bring silver to par. I assert that not more than one man said it would, and I have not been able to find in the record that anybody said it would. I know the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], who is not now present, was somewhat enthusiastic as to the result of the bill and he did on various occasions say that it would undoubtedly increase the price of silver, as we all hoped and as we all believed it would, and as it did.

When the Senator from Nevada on one occasion had spoken in enthusiastic terms of the advantage of the bill, I took occasion to say that I did not agree with him and that no legislation could bring silver to par save that which gave it full recognition as the equal of gold as a money metal. In a few words that I submitted to the Senate thirty minutes before the vote was taken on the bill I declared that it would not bring silver to par, and I declared then, as I had declared several days before, that it was not a silver bill and was not acceptable to the silver people. I think I used the term (I speak now from recollection) that the measure was illogical and indefensible from any standpoint except the one that it would give to the people of the United States more money. As a silver measure it had but little value. It is true that we had in the debate talked about bringing silver and gold to a parity, but that was always when we were advocating free coinage, just as in 1878 in this Chamber repeated declarations were made that free coinage would bring silver and gold to a parity. It has been asserted here repeatedly that we said then that the Bland-Allison bill would bring silver and gold to a parity. It is not true. Our assertion was that free coinage would do it and free coinage alone.

Mr. President, this body, by a vote of 42 to 35, passed a free-coinage act. That bill went to the other House, for it was a substitute, I believe, for a House bill, and eventually the bill got into a conference committee. The bill that was reported back by the conferees and that is now on the statute books was the result of that compromise. When that bill passed there were yeas 39, nays 26. Of the 39 men who voted for the bill 26 were pronounced advocates of monometallism, if not in fact in practice; 26 of them were those whom we have always classed as gold people and not as silver men; and 13 were those who had voted for free coinage in this body. In the other body the great mass of men who had voted for free coinage voted against the bill. Of the 100 votes against the bill not more than 15 had ever been opposed to free coinage. The rest of them had been pronounced in their votes, when an opportunity occurred, in favor of free and unlimited coinage. Not more than 15 men who voted for the bill had ever voted for free coinage in that House, or if they had ever done so they had not during that Congress.

So, Mr. President, it will not do to say that it is a silver bill, and if it has defects and dangers it will not do to say that it is legislation that we put on the statute book. If disaster comes, as it will, I have no doubt, if this policy is persisted in, let it be laid at the door of the men who have for fifteen years steadily resisted what I believe to be a very general public demand for the use of silver on equal terms with gold.

I do not say that to-day in all parts of the Union there is a majority of men in favor of free coinage. I know some very good silver men, bimetallists from principle, who are afraid of free coinage. I have never hesitated to say that there might be an honest difference of opinion among silver men on that question, but it can not be gainsaid that if the vote were taken of the people of the United States on the question of the use of silver on an equality with gold, if it could be done properly and safely, there would be a very decided majority of the people of the United States in favor of that proposition.

Mr. DAWES, Mr. HAWLEY, and others. All of us.

Mr. TELLER. All of us, Senators say. We have had it in the power of this Government to make silver and gold equal in terms before the law if we had had in the executive department men who were in favor of bimetallism in fact.

The President of the United States further says:

> The prophecies of the antisilver men of disasters to result from the coinage of $2,000,000 per month were not wider of the mark.

I suppose that refers to the prophecies of my friend from Vermont, who has just addressed the Senate, when he declared in 1878 that if we passed the bill called the Bland-Allison bill, not free coinage, the United States securities could never be sold again except at a ruinous rate of interest. He is still prophesying as he was then.

Again, the President says in his message:

> The friends of free silver are not agreed, I think, as to the causes that brought their hopeful predictions to naught.

There have been no "hopeful predictions" as to the rise of silver to par under this bill by any silver man anywhere that I know of. I do not know but that the people who have been for many years contending against every method we have proposed that looked towards the putting of silver and gold at a parity prophesied, when they were anxious that we should accept this compromise measure, as they called it, that it would bring silver to par; but if they did, they were false prophets then as they have been always when they have prophesied on this question.

The President then deals with the question of the fall in the price of silver, and says that silver was higher when the bill passed than later. That is true. There had been an excitement in silver when we proposed free coinage. When it looked as if free coinage might be entered upon, silver went up. When we proposed something less than free coinage and put that in the statute, silver went down from the high position that it had taken. I do not forget that there was a time after the passage of the bill when silver went to $1.20 in New York, but it went there by the manipulations of Wall street and not by the action or as the result of the action of Congress. It was speculation that put the price of silver up. Proposed legislation first put it up, and then the speculators in Wall street took hold of it and put it higher. There was not a silver man in the country who did not know and did not predict that there would be a fall in the price of silver, and yet silver has kept during the last year and a half, since this bill was passed, at a price above that at which it was previous to the proposed legislation.

So it may be safely said that the legislation of 1890 did not decrease the price of silver, but, on the contrary, to some extent it increased the price. We hoped it would, but we did not expect it would, put silver to par.

Then the President follows with a statement that during the last financial year the exports of silver had fallen off and the imports had increased, so that there was actually an excess of the imports over exports of two and three-fourths million of dollars or thereabouts.

Mr. President, I have looked carefully over the methods by which this conclusion was arrived at, and I am bound to say that as a matter of statistical elocution I have no fault to find with it; but there is a discrepancy between the Statistical Bureau and the Director of the Mint, from whom the President takes his figures, of something over $8,000,000. The Director of the Mint takes all the imports of silver that come to this country in every form. Nearly nine millions of dollars of silver at its invoiced price came into the country, principally through our ports on the south, mainly from Mexico, a little from some of the other countries, and $250,000 from British America, and this comes in principally in lead ores. The Director of the Mint deducts the commercial value of the silver, which he finds to be $8,250,000 or thereabouts. The Statistical Bureau, on the contrary, put this in the monthly imports of ores and metals and do not include it in the imports of silver.

The only fault to be found with this method of treatment is that it goes to the country, first, that we had an excess of imports of silver of nearly $3,000,000, and then that we had an increase of the production over the year before of quite an alarming amount to the people who believe that the production of silver is a calamity, and that seems to be the prevalent opinion of a great many persons in this country. From what political economy they learn that the production of the precious metals has been a weakness to a nation I am at a loss to understand. In every work on political economy which it has been my fortune to read I have found it laid down that the nation richest in the production of the two precious metals was the strongest nation. Every nation under the sun, save this, has hailed the production of the precious metals within its borders as a boon from the Almighty. We are the first people who ever have quarreled with the Almighty for putting the richest mines of the world within our borders. We are the first people on the face of the earth who have depreciated their own production.

First, then, we are told that there is an excess of silver imports, and that that is a misfortune. Why, Mr. President, all political economists say that if you can draw to you the precious metals you are doing to your country a good, a benefit; but we say, "Do not let it come; keep it away."

Recently, within a year, a great political convention in one of the great States of the Union actually proposed to put a duty upon silver to keep it out of the country. It was not "protection run mad," as one newspaper said; it was stupidity crystallized.

Mr. PLATT. Where was that?

Mr. TELLER. Pennsylvania. If anything would cause a man to lose confidence in the stability of free government it would be that two hundred or three hundred men selected from a great State could have so little idea of the benefits that a State might derive from the use of a precious metal that they would try to keep it out. It is in keeping with the management of affairs by the executive department of this Government for fifteen years, and it marks as much intelligence there as it does in the other place—no more stupidity in the one place than in the other.

The President proceeds:

> The producers of silver are entitled to just consideration, but they should not forget that the Government is now buying and putting out of the market what is the equivalent of the entire product of our silver mines. This is more than they themselves thought of asking two years ago.

Why, Mr. President, we have never asked the Government to buy our silver; we have said that if you propose to use silver at all, if you make it a valuable money metal, you must make it equal to gold, and the two metals must go hand in hand, with their relation fixed by law or established by custom. We have never advocated the passage of a bill in this Chamber or in the other upon the ground of protection to our industries or to our products. We have asked for more than the buying of four millions or the buying of ten or twenty or one hundred millions of silver a month; we have asked for a full recognition of silver as a money metal; we have declared our purpose not to yield this question until it was recognized; that the only solution of it was the full and complete recognition of the metals upon some established parity fixed by law. No gratuity has been given to us.

The President has finally arrived at the conclusion that the business of the world requires the two metals. Sir, I have sat in this Chamber and heard again and again the declaration from the men who proclaimed themselves bimetallists that silver was unfit for money, that it must be banished from the precious metals, that there would be hereafter but one money metal, and that would be gold, save that silver might be used as a subsidiary coin exactly as copper is used to a limited degree. The President of the United States has got to be a bimetallist; the Secretary of the Treasury is a bimetallist. Sir, we have made some progress. The whole world has been considering this question for fifteen years, and the best and the brightest men all over the world have been taking hold of the question and discussing it, and writing upon it. I believe it has become the universal sentiment of the world to-day that we can not dispense with silver, but that we must use it on some terms. The question now is upon what terms and how we shall make the relation of the two metals: one to the other, fixed and determined.

There has been a variety of views upon this subject. I have said myself, and I believe, that free coinage in the United States would bring the whole world to the use of silver, as it was prior to 1871. On that point I may be mistaken. I do not claime any infallibility to myself. I will admit that a free-coinage bill might not result as we believe, but we believe that it is the natural and logical method of arriving at what is now said by all to be the desirable point.

What, on the other hand, have those who are opposed to free coinage offered us? A few years ago they said to us, "do not buy any silver, let it go to 50 cents an ounce, and when it is down to 50 cents an ounce the whole world will see that silver ought to be rehabilitated, and then when that is done we will join in bringing it back to par." That has been what they have offered us, and that has been the only thing they have offered us. We have ever, as we had a right, doubted their honest desire that silver and gold should be used on equal terms. We knew the agencies at work. We knew that there was an interest strong and potent that makes itself felt everywhere. From the lowest among the people to the highest place within the gift of the people it makes itself felt. It does not want the use of silver on any terms except that it may be on the same terms that you use copper. So we have doubted it.

Mr. President, we have now another proposition, and it comes from the Executive of the United States. They have abandoned the idea that silver can be allowed to go to 50 cents an ounce or 25 cents, and now we have another proposition. What is it? That we shall accumulate all the gold of the world in this country and thus we shall make the money centers of Europe short, and the money centers of Europe will then say "Now that you have all the gold, which you intend to keep, we will join with you in using silver." Coming as it does from the Executive of the nation, I am bound to speak of it with respect, whatever I may think or whatever I may feel.

Let us see for a moment how we are to accumulate the gold of Europe. How much gold have you to get before all Europe will be calling for silver? You will not have to get very much, I admit, but how are you going to get it? When you have abundance of crops, when you have prosperity in this country, as we did have in the early part of the last year, if your gold goes abroad at the rate of a million dollars a day how are you going to keep it? Being a debtor nation, owing to Europe more than $2,000,000,000—more than $5,000,000,000 says the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], more than $2,000,000,000 certainly, to be conservative—how are you going to get the gold? How are we to call upon Europe to unlock her coffers and send her gold to us? I wait for some friend of this new method to tell us how we are to get it. I am in favor of getting it. I should like to see it come in at the rate of a million a day. I should like to see $500,000,000 or $1,000,000,000 of gold pour into this country, and I should not object to see an equal amount of silver coming here if it were exchanged for American products. Oh, Mr. President, that is but another makeshift, and that is another method by which we are to be delayed in marching up to the inevitable time when by law we are to put these two metals together, or else we are to abandon absolutely the use of silver except as a subsidiary coin.

From the first day of February to the last day of July of last year, 1891, $73,507,330 more of gold went to Europe than came to us from all parts of the world—more than one-tenth of the whole product of gold leaving us within four months, and in three months almost $60,000,000 went away. If we could inaugurate some system of that kind, perhaps we might accumulate the gold of Europe and finally thus squeeze the gold people of Europe into recognizing the value of silver. How are we to do it? They had our first-class gilt-edged securities. They sent them over here and they sent them at such figures that the men who held the gold in this country wanted them. They said "Let us have these securities; we prefer to have them to gold." Every dollar of that seventy-three and a half million dollars of gold went out of this country at a premium.

We are told that we shall drive gold to a premium. I have repeated frequently that it is at a premium now. Every dollar of it, says the Treasurer, went out at a premium. Gold bars to-day are at a premium in London, or at least they were a few days ago. They brought more money in the market than they would bring if put in the mint—more money than the Bank of England would pay for them if they were put in the bank. Gold is at a premium now, and when the President shall have adopted a system by which he will bring it into this country he will bring it here at a premium that will ruin this country.

I will admit that you might sell some securities; I will admit that the Government could issue some bonds payable in gold at a big interest, and that we could accumulate gold. Does anybody want to do it? Does anybody believe that would be wise financiering? Is there any statesman who would propose that now, for the purpose of hoarding gold, so as to compel Europe to agree with us in an international conference?

Mr. President, I have no doubt that this is a great scheme, and I have no doubt there is a great deal more in it than I can see. I am only speaking from my standpoint, and I shall expect when the advocates of the single standard or the special champions of this system take the floor that they will tell us how this is to be done. I shall be an interested listener when that takes place.

The President of the United States says further that there is danger by our insisting upon the use of silver that we shall bring this country to a silver basis. There never has been a moment in my life that I have not been a bimetallist, at least since I have understood the question. I should regret very much to see this country brought to a silver basis, just as I should regret to see it brought to a gold basis, simply because the two metals together are indispensable to the prosperity of any nation.

I know Great Britain is a gold country, and I know that she has been, to some extent, prosperous; but the prosperity of Great Britain is not to be compared with the prosperity of France. It is not to be compared with the prosperity of this country where, if we have not given full recognition to silver, at least we are using more than $500,000,000 of it to-day as money. It was Lord Beaconsfield who said in 1873, when discussing the question at Glasgow at a dinner, that some people think the prosperity of Great Britain is the result of the monetary system, the use of gold. He said that is not it; the use of gold is the result of our prosperity; when a nation gets to having great transactions then it wants gold, and not until then. So Great Britain has been somewhat prosperous with gold. She would be more prosperous with silver and gold than she has been with gold alone.

There has not been an entire unanimity among the statesmen of Great Britain on this subject. Some of the leading financiers of that country are to-day the most pronounced advocates in the world of bimetallism. A number of ex-presidents of the Bank of England have pronounced in favor of bimetallism. Public sentiment in Great Britain is not quite as potent as it is here, and yet there is an intelligent sentiment in that country in favor of bimetallism applied to Great Britain. Recently, within the last three months, all the textile-fabric associations of Great Britain met in a convention, and I hold in my hand, taken from an English paper, the resolution that they passed, which was accepted and adopted by the unanimous vote of all the associations of that country who are engaged in the manufacture of textile fabrics of all kinds. I will put it in my remarks without reading it. In that they declare in favor of bimetallism as applied to Great Britain. Public sentiment is slow to act in Great Britain, and the Government of Great Britain is slow, like ours, to listen to the voice of the people, but ultimately they hear it, both in England and in this country, and ultimately they will hear that they are not for free coinage simply, but for bimetallism upon an established basis that will be enduring and unchanging as it was before the hostile legislation of 1871 and 1873. I will have the manifesto to which I referred put in at this point.

A MANIFESTO IN FAVOR OF BIMETALLISM.

The following important manifesto was issued last night by the United Textile-Factory Workers' Association, representing the entire textile trades of Great Britain: "The council of these associations has for a considerable period given much attention to the effect upon the prominent interests of the textile industries of Great Britain of the demonetization of silver and the consequent absence of a part of exchange between gold and silver moneys. The conclusion they have come to, which is much strengthened by the events of the last year, is that the prosperity of the trade is much affected by this question, and having in view the interests of the operatives and others employed in textile industries, whom they represent and whose well-being the association has specially to safeguard, a clear duty is imposed upon them, which they can not and must not avoid. That duty is to impress, by every legitimate means in their power, upon those who have or seek any parliamentary influence, the imperative necessity of insisting that Government and Parliament should at once grapple with the evil of our present monetary system, and take such immediate steps as shall insure the position of silver as standard money throughout the British Empire, and between this and other nations. Whatever other questions of importance may be before the country the urgent need of this reform demands that it shall be promptly dealt with, and it is impressed upon this council that they should without loss of time inform you that circumstances connected with the trade, and with the well-being of those employed in it, render it imperative that the whole forces—political and moral—of the industrial classes of this country should be exercised to promote it to a successful conclusion."

The above manifesto is signed by the representatives of every association in the trade throughout the country.—Clipping from Galignani's Messenger, December 1, 1891.

The President says that he has endeavored to keep himself advised as to the feeling in Europe on the question of an international arrangement. For fear I may misquote him I will read his exact language:

I have endeavored by the use of official and unofficial agencies to keep a close observation of the state of public sentiment in Europe upon this question, and have not found it to be such as to justify me in proposing an international conference. There is, however, I am sure, a growing sentiment in Europe in favor of a larger use of silver, and I know of no more effectual way of promoting this sentiment than by accumulating gold here.

As to the accumulation of gold, I have said all that I care to say. Is there such a sentiment in Great Britain, in Germany, in Austria, in Russia, in France as would justify the Government of the United States in taking active steps towards an international arrangement? In the first place, the advocates of the gold standard or the opponents of silver have always insisted that we could do nothing without an international arrangement. On that point we have differed; yet all the silver men of the country have been ready and anxious that there should be an international arrangement. We knew that with an international arrangement which opened practically the mints of the world to silver there could be no longer any question of a divergence between silver and gold. We knew that when the great commercial nations of the world kept their mints open for silver it went as high as 10 per cent above gold. Silver is the favorite money metal of three-fourths of the world. It is used in preference to gold, and more than half of the nations of the earth can not dispense with its use.

What would India with its 250,000,000 people do without a silver currency? What would Russia with its 100,000,000 or more people do without a silver currency? What would any nation that is not rich and composed exclusively of capitalists do without silver? The four hundred and odd million silver dollars that are in circulation in this country do more than ten times the business that is done by the $700,000,000 of gold. Who uses the gold? The capitalists and the capitalists only. It is the thing with which you store values and with which a limited amount of business may be done, yet the great mass of business that is done over the counter and in the shop and in the mill is done by the men who hand out a dollar at a time and not one hundred or one thousand dollars. So silver all over the world is doing money duty to-day, and last year, in spite of all the opprborium thrown on it, $134,000,000 were coined in the world for the use of the people of the world. Give it advent to the mints and you will hear no more of cheap money or dear money, and there will be no more demagogues parading the land saying that the silver question is a question of cheap money.

The man who asserts that this is a question of cheap money or of dear money is either too ignorant to discuss it or too dishonest. It is not a question of cheap money. What we say is, put the two metals together, tie them together by law so that they shall be equal one with the other at the ratio that you have established, maintained for generations and ages, first by the commercial consent, for the last five hundred years by law, maintained without difficulty. And yet we are told that because we propose that 412½ grains of silver shall be equal everywhere, either as bullion or as coin, with 25.8 grains of gold, we are for cheap money. I repeat that I have no words to express my contempt for those who treat this subject from that standpoint, which is neither honest nor wise.

Could we have made an international arrangement? Great Britain has appointed a commission to discuss this question, to consider and report on it, since the last international conference. France has created a commission; Italy has created a commission; Belgium has created a commission; the whole world is dealing with this question, and we, the people who have more wealth than any other nation on the face of the earth, producing nearly one-half of the silver of the world either from our mines or from our smelters, stand back and say "the time has not come; we will wait till Russia shall ask us, we will wait till Italy with its poverty shall ask us to come and take part in an international conference." Who ought to move in it any quicker than we? Who ought to move in it with more potency and with more power? Sixty-five million people, backed by a wealth unknown in any other country, would have power in an international conference.

But the President says he has taken pains to find out. So did his predecessor. Two gold men were sent abroad to find out whether we could make an international arrangement—two men who neither understood the question that they were sent out to consider nor had any desire to complete such an arrangement; and recently the President sends a banker from New York to Berlin. I suppose if the honest truth were told that that is a delightful way to give somebody a trip to Europe and the Government pay the expense. Certainly all the benefit to be derived will be by the individual who thus at our expense travels abroad to consider this question. Had the President chosen to select a prominent silver man, I could name twenty out of public life who could have gone there and who could have made a report that would have been of value on this question. You will get none from bankers, you will get none from the gold monometallists, and it is useless to say that because Mr. So-and-So has been to Europe and come back and said there was no opportunity for an international arrangement, therefore we should remain silent.

When the bill of 1890 was before the Senate I gave as one reason why I intended to vote for it, that I thought within a year there would be an international arrangement, and I believed it would be made. I had supposed then that this Administration was friendly to an effort of that kind. The Senator from Vermont says he does not think that this Administration will let that come to pass, The Administration has declared that it does not intend to do anything until there is a change in Europe. Hostility has existed in the executive department of the Government, not only in this Admistration, but in the preceding one, against even such an attempt, and none has been made since 1881.

Mr. President, I did not rise to discuss the silver question. That I shall discuss more at length some other time. I rose to enter my protest against the declaration of the Executive and the Senator from Vermont that we were responsible for the legislation of 1890, an act which I said, standing in my place here, "I vote for with extreme reluctance. I vote for it because it gives to the people of the United States more than $50,000,000 of currency a year. I vote for it because I believe it will revive drooping industries and stimulate business, and bring hope and courage to the people of the United States." I did not vote for it because it was a silver bill, for it was not. Not only did that bill contain a provision for the purchase of 4,500,000 ounces of silver per month, but it contained also a provision that unlocked $62,000,000 from the Treasury which was there held away from the people, with no use on the part of the Government or anybody else; and in four months and a half under that bill we increased the circulation, first, by $62,000,000 locked up in the Treasury, and we purchased $28,000,000 worth of silver. Thus in the neighborhood of $90,000,000, less the retirement of some national-bank notes, was the money of the country increased, and part of it, almost $62,000,000, went out immediately.

We have been told over and over again by the friends of monometallism and the opponents of silver that this is inflation; that we must not put out too much money. There was a net output of money in this country between the 1st day of July, 1890, and the 1st day of January, 1891, of almost $100,000,000, and no disaster came; but, on the contrary, the industries of the country were stimulated, hope revived, and courage was taken by the people.

The question comes back, what are you to do with the act of 1890? A distinguished politician in another place—I think he is not here yet—has announced that this act should be repealed. Mr. President, this act will not be repealed. There is no considerable number of public men in this country who dare repeal it. What will you give in the place of the purchase of the four and a half million ounces of silver? You may repeal that provision if you can give to the people as much money by some other method, and you can only do it by free coinage or by an unlimited issue of money at the option of the Government, or else the act will never be repealed. I say, therefore, it is here to stay, and it is here to stay fraught with the dangers that attend it, and I will admit they are great.

My friends on the other side of the Chamber did not vote for the passage of that bill. Twenty-five of them were silver men and voted with me for free coinage. They were not quite willing to take what they thought was the risk. I took the risk, which I was not then insensible of, and am not now. There are now $539,000,000 of silver in this country practically in use as money. Every year you add to the sum 54,000,000 ounces of silver, and in ten years you will have one thousand millions of silver in your coffers. It will not make much difference, as the Senator from Vermont indicates, about the care of it. You can dig a hole in the ground and drop it in and it will be safe from robbers and thieves and rust and decay. That is not the question. You can put almost all the silver of the world inside of a chamber like this if it is put in a solid body. That is not the danger. You have an increasing amount of silver year after year till you have now more than $500,000,000, and if the purchase at the present rate continues will soon have $1,500,000,000, and by and by the time may come, I will admit, when with such a mass of silver, unrecognized as money, a commodity only, there will be danger that we shall be on a silver basis. If we ever come to a silver basis, which I do not think we shall, we shall come to it through the act of July, 1890, and not through free coinage.

Free coinage lifts up the silver metal and makes it the equal of gold. The act of 1890 keeps it a commodity, degrades it, and holds it in subjection to gold. By and by, Mr. President, the people of the United States will say, "We have a great interest in this large amount of our money in the Treasury; it is ours; every ounce of it was bought with our sweat and our blood." Every ounce of it has come out of the people; it has come out of their hard earnings; it is theirs, and they will not let you ever depreciate it. You can not sell it for less than $1.29 an ounce. Then what? You will have an unusual, an undue amount of silver, and then you may come to a silver basis. If you do, I repeat again, you will come to it by the act of 1890. I knew the danger when I voted for the bill, but I did not believe that that would be comparable to the gold basis. I had rather see this country on a silver basis to-day than on a gold basis. If we are to have but one basis I am for silver, not because silver is produced in my State, but because it better meets the wants of the people of this country, as it does the wants of the human race.

I repeat that every American statesman ought to direct his attention to seeing how the two metals may be brought together, and tie them there indissolubly, so that they shall never go apart. That, Mr. President, you can not do by putting silver down to 50 cents an ounce, and you can not do it by accumulating gold from Europe. You must do it either by taking a heroic step and passing a free coinage bill with the hope that that will bring the world to us, or else you must have an international arrangement. No effort has been made by any gold man in the United States in favor of an international arrangement. There is not a gold man here who has ever lifted his voice in favor of an international arrangement, unless it was to postpone action in this body and elsewhere. When Congress had adjourned you heard no more about an international arrangement.

Mr. President, the way to make your silver in the Treasury, whether it be five hundred millions or a thousand millions, equal to gold, is to adopt some measure by which the whole people will credit it as they credit gold. The day that silver was demonetized in Germany, silver was at a premium in London. It had been year in and year out. It was sought after more than gold. You can make it so now when you open your mints.

The Senator from Vermont says that demand is what makes value. Grant it, Mr. President, what is the demand of silver? An open mint. Open the doors of your mints and you have practically put into money every ounce of bullion in the world. It need not come here to be coined, nor it need not go anywhere else to be coined. It is, for all practical purposes, money in its state of bullion as well as it is in coin.

Why is it that gold everywhere is of the same value? Because the demand for it is the open mint of every nation in the world. There is no nation that closes its doors to gold. They may not make it legal tender, but they are ready to take it. There are nations which use silver only as a legal tender, but gold is not despised and degraded. Open the mints of the world to silver, by international arrangement if you wish, and I say that is the best way to do it if it can be done, and I believe it can, and you will hear no more about cheap silver. Silver will be worth, as it was for years, the French price, one dollar and thirty-three cents and a fraction.

Mr. President, we have gone through the most remarkable condition—and I am not going to speak at length upon this—that has ever been seen in the world. We have had seventeen years, or fifteen years, at least, of general depression. We have had occasional revivals of business, but gradually the price of productions has sunk lower and lower; the value of farms has been going down steadily, and that has been done for a decade and a half. A universal condition must have a universal cause. Depression in England might mean one thing, but depressions all over the world must mean that it has been produced by the same causes. Lower and lower have things gone down until now the depreciation has struck the securities of the world. A few years ago the men who had money went cheerfully into municipal bonds, State bonds, and national bonds, because they were supposed to be above the laws of trade that govern the price of ordinary commodities. So bonds were issued and went abroad. A financial paper of Great Britain, reiterated by our own financial paper in New York, has declared that within two years the loss upon State and national bonds alone—not municipal bonds—has been $800,000,000. Five hundred million dollars of that has been in Europe, including the small part of Asia called Egypt—$800,000,000!

Mr. President, we have received a good price for wheat and corn, and I was going to say cotton, but no, we can not eat cotton. We have received a good price for the necessaries of life. Why? Because a great portion of the world has been cursed with famine. Twenty millions of men, we are told, in Russia alone are in dire distress and want bread. Crops have failed everywhere abroad, and the magnificent crops that we have made this year and are exporting are bringing back to us riches, not gold entirely, although some of that is coming. We sent out in six months not less than 125,000,000 bushels of wheat; our exports were in one month $45,000,000 more than the imports, and yet gold is not coming to this country to any great extent. We have not yet recovered that which went out in the single month of May. Cotton, to which my attention is called by a remark of the Senator behind me [Mr. STEWART], can not be eaten. Cotton is cheaper to-day than it has been in forty odd years. I am told by Senators who live in the cotton region that it is away below the price at which it possibly can be raised; that the farmers who raise cotton are, as was said of the farmers of Ireland, not raising cotton for profit, but for bare subsistence. Why is it that the price of cotton is low? I will admit that there is a great crop. I will admit that there is a crop of cotton greater than ever before, but an examination of the statistics of Europe will show that it is not simply that. While the crop has increased enormously, the use of it has fallen off very greatly. In a few months the shortage in the mills of Great Britain alone was nearly 50,000 bales.

We have encouraged the raising of cotton in Egypt; we have encouraged the raising of cotton in India. Why? We have sent our silver there and bought their cotton at rates that we could not have bought it if silver had been equal with gold; and there is now a great amount of cotton from all parts of the world coming into Great Britain, and what is worse, the whole world has got so poor that the exports of textile fabrics made of cotton are by the late statistics of Great Britain shown to be materially falling off. The world is too poor to buy even cotton, and so the mills do not use it. I saw recently in the London Economist, which I have on my table, a statement that there was no demand for cotton yarn anywhere any more to speak of; that the mills were running on short time. Why? Because the people can not afford to buy, and textile fabrics are to-day cheaper than they ever were in the history of manufactures. If we escape for the time this depression, we return to it when our crops are no better than usual, or when the crops abroad are as good as usual, when we have no extraordinary demand for our supplies. If we are wise we shall not be satisfied with the prosperity of the present hour, but we will look to what may come next year and the year after and the following year. We should do something to return to the condition that the world was in previous to 1871; and everywhere it is admitted that there has been a condition lamentable indeed ever since the destruction of silver as money. Beaconsfield, in his Glasgow speech in 1873, declared that such would be the result of the demonetization of silver, and then it had not been fully demonetized, for then it was still in use, and the mints of the Latin Union were still open.

Mr. President, before I stop—and I shall stop in a moment—I want to say one word about an international arrangement that I omitted. If we propose to make an international arrangement and only make it when we have the consent of Great Britain, we shall never make it. That is the demand which is made by those who oppose free coinage, that we shall have an international arrangement which shall take in the world. Mr. President, you will never get Great Britain to agree to any international arrangement, at least not now. Possibly in time, when the voice of the people shall have been thoroughly heard, they may do it, but not to-day. I do not believe to-day you can get Germany to change her financial system. Can we do it without Germany and Great Britain?

The Latin Union, containing only 10,000,000 more people than there are in the United States, maintained for a series of years without difficulty the proper relation established by France between gold and silver. If the Latin Union, with its limited population and its lack of money—for while our population is not equal to that of the Latin Union our wealth is vastly superior—could do it we may reasonably believe that if we have the Latin Union, the United States, Russia, Austria, Belgium, and other countries, which there is every indication we can secure, we may maintain the parity without any difficulty. Is it not worth while to try it? Is it not a better scheme than the hoarding of European gold? Is it not more easily accomplished, and when it is done will it not be final and complete?

Mr. President, I could not hear all that the Senator from Vermont said, but I suppose his speech contained the usual prophecies of evil that we have had in the President's message and in other places if we proceed to insist upon the free coinage of silver. We are told that no nation now opens its mint to the free coinage of silver. That is the lamentable fact which stares us in the face. We have tried that as one nation and have failed. We have not here the power to compel any other to do it. The authorities that could try it here have signally failed. Nay, more; I am bound to say that I do not think they want it done.

What is our duty? We can not force the executive department to attempt to settle this question by an international conference, for if we do they would put upon it such men as Mr. Cleveland sent abroad and such a man as the present Executive sent abroad on this question. Mr. President, there will be no international arrangement made until some people go from this country who desire the accomplishment of that purpose. When that shall have been done I believe an international arrangement may be made and that every day we wait we are losing ground. We ought to have taken action when we passed the act of 1890. We ought to have taken active steps then for an international arrangement. It is said now that Austria-Hungary is going to a gold basis. Austria-Hungary is trying to resume specie payments. She is trying to do what she has not been able to do in forty years, pay her paper in metal. She accumulated last year $16,000,000 of gold, and it is said she has accumulated this year $60,000,000 of gold. She will require to have $100,000,000 in gold before she can resume specie payment, and then she may not be able to maintain it. Russia last April took $26,000,000 of the world's gold. There is not gold enough to do the world's business, says everybody. I need not enter into that discussion. I need not attempt now what I have done heretofore when that was disputed and contradicted, to show that there was not gold enough to do the business. That is admitted. That admission is an advance which we have made. We have routed our enemies at least from that ground, and now they admit there is not gold enough, and it is a simple question, how shall we proceed? Nothing more is left. The era of debate has passed. What shall be the method by which we shall accomplish that which we all say is a desirable end? I admit, again, that on that there may be a difference of opinion. I will admit that we who believe that the free coinage of silver will bring that more speedily than anything else may be mistaken, but I insist that it is incumbent upon those who now profess to be in favor of bimetallism, who are not in favor of free coinage, to tell us what will take the place of free coinage, what will do it, and do it with greater safety than free coinage. When they present some project to us of that character they will find the original silver men ready to meet them on fair ground, and then and not till then shall we believe that they are sincere in their devotion to bimetallism.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I do not rise for the purpose of taking part in the discussion of this question at this time. I desire simply to ask the Secretary to read an extract from a speech made by the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] in the Senate of the United States on the 13th day of June, 1890, which I think will be pertinent to one question discussed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER].

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DAVIS in the chair). The extract will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

> Mr. STEWART. * * * I think if we could buy and coin $4,000,000 worth per month it would place silver so nearly upon a parity with gold upon the ratio of 16 to 1 that everybody would be willing to take the final step, that all would see there was no danger. I think four and a half million ounces a month would certainly put silver to par. That would take up the American product and pretty nearly all the ores that are worked in the United States. I think that is about the right figure. If we are going to restore silver, four and a half million ounces would be about equivalent to free coinage, and would take up all that is produced in this country.

Mr. STEWART. I had forgotten that I had expressed the opinion contained in the extract just read at the desk. I apologize to the President for saying that no opinions of that kind had been publicly expressed in debate. Of course the expression, "by about equivalent to free coinage," I meant about the same amount of silver would be absorbed, as the context will show. The context will also show that I was expressing regret that the Secretary of the Treasury had not purchased under the Bland act the full amount of $4,000,000 worth per month and given the world an object lesson of its effect upon the market. We were then discussing the act of 1890, and I was anxious for its passage. It was all that could be obtained.

In that very speech, and in every other, I claimed that free coinage was the ultimate end to be attained, the only final solution. I was not mistaken as to four million and a half ounces of silver per month absorbing the American product. It takes about all that is now produced and probably much more than will be produced a few years hence. Nor was I mistaken in the tendency of the bill to enhance the price of silver. Its average market price since the passage of that bill has been about ten cents an ounce. I was anxious for the experiment to be tried as to how the increased purchases would effect the price of silver. I am somewhat disappointed at the result.

Previous to 1890 all the silver which was produced was annually consumed, and if conditions had remained the same, the doubling of the purchase of the United States would naturally have advanced the price of silver to par. But conditions changed. The gold combination united to depress the price of silver. It is done through the use of council bills. About two and a half millions per week are required to pay Indian obligations in London, such as interest on the public debt and other public and private obligations. The Bank of England sells these bills, which are orders for silver and payable only in India. They are bought by persons desiring to make remittances to India to pay for wheat, cotton, jute, and other commodities. When more of them are sold than is required, the price of council bills goes down, and with the price of such bills the price of silver declines, because the bills are orders for silver.

By this mode the Bank of England is enabled to sell silver "short" without being required to fill their "shorts." This power has been liberally used during the past year. Besides, poor crops in India has made it impossible for that country to purchase its usual amount of silver. The falling off of Indian purchases of silver has been nearly equal to the increased purchases in the United States. Still the price of silver has never fallen so low as it was previous to the agitation of the silver question in 1890, and the tendency is upwards.

Nearly all the accumulation of silver bullion in New York has been exhausted, and the market will soon be relieved from that dead weight. But the act of 1890 has demonstrated that the price of silver can not be maintained on a parity with gold until silver is recognized as money equally with gold. It was the mint price of silver previous to 1873 that determined its market price; it is the mint price of gold that now determines the price of that metal. Nothing but free coinage will restore silver to par. This is now demonstrated, and it makes no difference what I or anyone else thought or said. We have now had an object lesson which we ought to have had years ago if the Secretary of the Treasury had bought the maximum under the Bland act.

We have had the object lesson for which I contended in my speech, an extract of which has been read. The middlemen who buy cheap silver in the United States, coin it, and sell it at par in Asia for Asiatic products and make an enormous profit, in combination with the bondholders of Europe, have shown their power to depress the price of silver while it remains a commodity. They are enjoying a similar harvest to that enjoyed by the merchants of San Francisco during the war when they bought goods in New York for greenbacks and sold them for gold on the Pacific coast and made enormous profits. We want no more object lessons. Nothing but free coinage will answer the purpose.

While I am on my feet, I should like to call the attention of those who are to debate this question to the real issue. I have never met a gold man who would discuss the issue. The issue is, have we gold enough for use as money, and if we have not what are we going to do about it?

There are two kinds of circulating medium: one is credit-money and the other is money requiring no redemption. Eighteen years ago, according to the estimates of statisticians, there was in the world about $7,500,000,000 of gold and silver coin, which, in the language of the royal commission, was one month. Upon it rested the credit of the circulation of the world. To-day, according to the estimates of the Director of the Mint, there is less than $3,750,000,000 of that kind of money.

The Senator from Vermont and all gold men say that silver must be discarded as real money; that it shall be used only as subsidiary coin; that it shall depend upon redemption in gold to give it circulating power. If so, it is no better than paper. It is credit money. Now, the reduction of the world's money one-half, that is, the reduction of the money of the world by one-half, in eighteen years, has brought calamity everywhere, has reduced prices everywhere, and it is not going to stop. There has been no material increase in the gold coin of the world since silver was demonetized. It is all absorbed for nonmonetary purposes.

It is used much more largely than formerly for ornaments; it is used in dentistry; it is used in photography; it is used in ornamentation; it is hoarded in Asia, whence it never comes, because their exports exceed their imports, and the fact is that our stock of gold here is not increasing, but must diminish in the future, and the Secretary of the Treasury and others say there is not gold enough in use as money. Now, how will you increase it? You can not increase it with paper because that has to be redeemed; you can not increase it with silver for that has to be redeemed also, if your standard is based upon this narrow foundation of gold alone. I have not heard a gold man who would meet the question and say how he was going to supplement the gold of the world, how he was to increase it; he simply makes war on silver, talks against that, but proposes no remedy.

There must be a remedy for this shrinking basis of circulation. The distinction between the circulation and the basis of circulation is wide. You can have circulation; you can have credit. I suppose that with the $3,727,000,000 of money used for reserve is based a credit and credit circulation of from $125,000,000,000 to $150,000,000,000. There is not of real money 3 per cent of the credit in the world. The failure of the Barings has disclosed the fact that the world is bankrupt on a gold basis. The proposition now is to accumulate gold. Austria is going to try it and bankrupt herself. We will try it, and we shall be bankrupt.

It is said that we will hoard gold here. What will that do for your cotton-planter? If you take the gold away from Europe, where your market is, by selling bonds here and paying large interest and accumulating it, gold will become scarcer there, and they can not buy your products, and cotton will be cheaper and cheaper, and all your products will be cheaper. What we want is a proper basis, and there is no way to have it except to recognize silver as real money.

Why are 25.8 grains of standard gold always worth $1? Because it can be exchanged at the mint for $1. Why were 412½ grains of standard silver always worth a dollar during the whole history of the country and for all time previous to 1873. Because it could be exchanged at the mint for $1. The only way to put silver on a parity with gold is to give it the same privileges. If it is treated as a commodity it will be speculated in as a commodity and can not be a measure of value.

I want some gold advocate to show that there is gold enough. I believe they have all admitted that there is not. Then I want to have him show out of what material we can make any real money, money that does not have to be redeemed, money that is not a promise to pay, without the use of silver as money. There is no relief from this but in the use of silver. No one has suggested it. The buying of silver and treating it as a commodity does not do it. There can be no increase in the volume of money, but it must shrink continually without the free coinage of silver, for if that metal is not to be used and you adhere to gold there is no prospect in the world but continued contraction. I make the statement that there is not a farm in England or in the United States where it has not been affected by immigration that will sell for 50 cents on the dollar for what it would have brought eighteen years ago, and that corresponds precisely with the shrinkage of the volume.

There is only half as much real money of ultimate redemption as there was eighteen years ago. You circulate paper and you circulate silver, but when you come to your reserves, in which all credits must be ultimately paid, you have only half as much as you had eighteen years ago, and that is the trouble. How are you going to increase those reserves? One nation may make sacrifices and buy gold and impoverish its people; another nation will do the same; but the people suffer.

Since the failure of the Barings it has been the business of every great financial institution to increase its reserves at all hazards and reduce its credits; and that is why the national and state bonds of the world have shrunk $800,000,000. It is because the moneyed institutions must have gold at all hazards; they must sacrifice everything; they must sacrifice their securities and have gold or go into bankruptcy; and thousands of them must fail, for there is no gold to give them all reserves; and business must shrink under the withering grasp of contraction, which is inevitable.

No gold man has ever suggested a remedy. No gold man has ever suggested how we can enlarge the basis of credit, the basis of circulation. In private conversation every one admits that we are on the downward grade toward bankruptcy; that prices are shrinking everywhere and enterprises are being crushed and destroyed. Bonds that are out are now down. We thought the bonds would be paid, but now States and nations are afraid of bankruptcy. They see that it is impossible for them to deliver.

Suppose the United States with all its power should undertake to deliver a thousand buffaloes; could it do it? You talk about its credit; but could it do it? No, because they do not exist; and if the United States should undertake to deliver more gold than it can get or than exists, more than it can obtain, then its credit is good for nothing, an utter impossibility is undertaken. It is impossible to find gold enough to sustain all the financial institutions that now exist to maintain the vast fabric of credit that has been built up on this narrow foundation. There is not enough gold. The supply must be increased or bankruptcy must follow.

Because there was this year a famine in the Old World and bountiful crops here we must not be deceived. We were deceived in many respects about it. We found imported products cheaper than they ever were before. We did not know the cause. The people of the Old World were forced to sell their commodities for what they could get in order to buy something to eat. Consequently they have made a terrible sacrifice during the current year. We have not realized the suffering of those who have bought our wheat and our corn, what sacrifices they have made to pay for them. They were unable to send us gold, and they sent us their commodities at a greatly depreciated value; but they are unable to take our cotton as formerly, because they have nothing to pay for it. Their people can not take it because they are unable to buy enough to clothe them. So business is shrinking to correspond with the shrinking volume of currency.

We hear the gold men talk, but none of them have the courage or the manliness, after they have admitted that there is not gold enough, to suggest any means of relief; and when there is not gold enough the President has suggested to us to get what there is and destroy the others. That is the proposition. If you take the gold away from Europe, where our wheat and cotton are sold, the price of wheat and cotton must go down, and it is going down in consequence of the shrinkage of the volume of currency.

The effect upon us is shown by the cotton; it will be shown next year by the wheat crops at home. If there had been good crops of wheat and other grain in Europe your wheat in this country this year would not have sold for enough to pay the cost of production. It was only the famine that has inflicted untold misery upon millions of starving Europeans that has given us temporary relief this year. But the time is coming for us when the crops will be good there, and we must continue to take less and less for our own crops with this shrinking volume as a basis of our circulation.

Eighteen years ago it took $7,500,000,000 of real money to measure the credit and property of the world. How does it happen that now $3,750,000,000 is enough? How can it be sustained with half that amount? Does not that account for dull times? I say that if the gold men were honest and if they were sincere, having admitted that there is not gold enough, they would suggest some plan, or being unable to suggest any they would recur to the plan that has worked so well through all the ages and use both metals as money, and have a wider base. If they can suggest no plan, and they admit we are going now in the wrong direction and worse times are coming, consequently if they have no plan they should take ours. If you gold advocates have a plan, suggest it, and let us examine it, but do not talk about the drug of silver, the piling up of silver.

The question is, shall the business of the world be contracted to a gold basis? We are not there yet; there has got to be a great deal of shrinking to get there. We have been shrinking credit rapidly since it was found out on account of the failure of the Barings. The question is, will you continue that process with not gold enough, or will you suggest a remedy? I hope that the next Senator who discusses this question will frankly take one or the other horn of the dilemma, and either maintain that there is gold enough and show it, or if there is not gold enough, tell us what he will do about it; how we are to increase the money of ultimate redemption that does not have to be redeemed. You can put out more promises to pay, and get out paper or silver, if silver has got to be redeemed, no matter what shape it is in; but the day of final reckoning will come and you must be prepared for a crash, such a crash as the world has never seen.

If it had not been for the Bank of France the calamity would have come last year. She loaned $15,000,000 to the Bank of England to tide it over. It is but tiding over now, each struggling to get reserves so that they may be saved; but the time will come when it can not be tided over. Something will happen somewhere making a demand for gold that can not be supplied, with $125,000,000,000 of indebtedness and only $3,750,000,000 of money with which to pay it. It all rests on that. We are in constant danger. The slightest movement of gold affects the price of property everywhere. We see in every banking house, the first thing in the morning, in every broker's shop, every indication of the movement of gold. They are afraid that the foundation of their business will be taken away. They realize that it rests upon gold, and that there is not gold enough; that somebody has got to suffer. Why shall we make the world suffer? Why shall we act against Europe? It is for our interest that there shall be gold in Europe, and plenty of it, because there is where we sell our commodities.

We do not want gold dear there; we want it so that we can buy it. You can not buy gold with your wheat and corn without making a tremendous sacrifice, and every year that sacrifice will be greater and greater. Do not be deceived about the actual facts, the crops this year and famine on the other side. That state of affairs will not be perpetual. We are bound to suffer, and we are beginning to suffer, and there is no help unless we have more real money for ultimate redemption.

That is the issue. It does not make any difference what I thought or anybody else thought, the proposition is before us; let us discuss it hereafter like men. If you are in favor of continued contraction stick to gold. If you intend to enlarge the basis or foundation of credit instead of diminishing it tell us how you will do it. We say return to the money of the Constitution, return to the money that has been in use from prehistoric times, return to silver, a better money than gold. Silver is used by 1,200,000,000 people in some form as a legal-tender money or as a subsidiary coin. Gold is not used by the masses of the people and never was.

If gold had been demonetized by the commercial nations as silver was it would have fallen more than silver, because nobody would use it then. The commercial nations could not quite destroy silver, because it is the money of the people; but there are comparatively few people in the world who ever saw gold. It is not in general circulation anywhere; and if it had been demonetized by the commercial nations it would not have been money at all; and with one hundred years of supply on hand for other purposes, nobody using it as money, the entire money demand being destroyed, it would have fallen 75 per cent by this time as compared with silver.

If any man can mention a better way to increase the basis of circulation and relieve the suffering masses who are laboring under contraction and to revive business and let this generation prosper, than in returning to the money of the Constitution and the money that has been used from prehistoric times, let him state it. If he can not, do not let him criticise our plan. Bring forward your plan. But is your plan so cruel, is your plan so grasping, is your plan so wicked, that you dare not name it?

Do you want further to legislate to enhance the value of your property and depreciate the value of the property of everybody else? Is that the object? Is that the motive behind it? Do you want contraction? In other words, do you want gold alone because it will be dearer and worth more in your pocket than it would be if you had more money so that all people could get some? If that is your object, state your selfish purpose squarely and do not beat about the bush. There are but two sides of this question, either to have more money or to continue to suffer all the baneful effects of contraction and hard times.

Any sum of money which may be necessary to carry out the object of this resolution is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Passed the Senate January 5, 1892.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a different request from that which I made yesterday to the House, with reference to this matter. I find some differences of opinion in relation to this resolution of the Senate, and that there is a desire to have it referred to a committee. It is easy to be seen that something must be done at an early day, if done at all. The Committee on Naval Affairs think, and I believe with a show of reason, that they have jurisdiction over the subject. Therefore I ask that it be referred to them, with the right to report at any time.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Why not take it up now and pass it?

Mr. KILGORE. I think the Committee on Appropriations have jurisdiction over this subject, and that it should go to that committee. If it requires unanimous consent to send it to the Committee on Naval Affairs, or to any other committee than the Committee on Appropriations, I shall object to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will place before the House the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT]. He asks unanimous consent for the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Naval Affairs, with the right to report at any time. Is there objection?

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I would like to inquire whether an objection will prevent the simple reference of the resolution to a committee under the existing status of affairs; and, if so, under what rule?

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that a change from the ordinary proceeding under which resolutions have been so referred, which change would allow the right to report at any time, and which must carry with it the right to consider at any time, would be objectionable.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Under what rule?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There has been no code of rules adopted for the government of the body up to this time, but in the absence of such code of rules the Chair would be inclined to hold that the settled practice of the House heretofore would properly be looked to for the government of the body, until rules are adopted, in determining what is the parliamentary law.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Common parliamentary law, I think.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not understand that it has been the practice of the House, in the absence of rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the resolution is before the House to take such action as it may desire.

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BOUTELLE. I hope it will be considered at this time.

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Speaker, has there been any reference of the Senate resolution as yet?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There has not.

Mr. MCCREARY. Then, Mr. Speaker, I have a petition, sent to the Congress of the United States by Gen. Cassius M. Clay, a distinguished citizen, who represented the United States as minister to Russia for a number of years. As the petition is short, I ask that it be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the petition will be read in connection with the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I will not object to the reading of the petition, but I make the point that it is the duty of the Speaker to refer that joint resolution to the Committee on Appropriations, or any other appropriate committee, without any further order upon the part of the House, unless a motion be made to the contrary. I submit that to the Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state, in response to the point made by the gentleman from Texas, that in the absence of a code of rules governing the House the inclination of the Chair would be to submit the matter to the House; but in that disposition the Chair thinks that the first question in order would be its reference to a committee. That being voted down the House can proceed to its consideration.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then, Mr. Speaker, I hope the House sees the situation, and will vote down the motion for its reference, for if it should be referred to a committee without leave to report at any time this matter is smothered by a single objection.

Mr. KILGORE. I suppose we can trust the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the petition forwarded to the desk by the gentleman from Kentucky will be read. The Chair hears no objection.

The petition was read, as follows:

RUSSIA—THE PETITION OF CASSIUS MARCELLUS CLAY.

To the President, the Senate, and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

Your petitioner, the undersigned, would respectfully represent that he is a native-born citizen of Kentucky and the Federal Union, exercising his constitutional right. He learns that a food famine exists in the Russian Empire, extending over vast areas of land and millions of peoples, which that Government, with all its great resources and humanity, may not be able to meet. That the Russian autocratic dynasty and people have from the earliest times been on the most friendly terms with this nation. Especially in our last war did they stand in moral support and avowed defense of the union of these States against all Europe and Great Britain, not that she loved the North more than the South (for she did not), but because she loved the nation more than both. That in the opinion of this petitioner, in spite of calumnies and sensational misrepresentations, Russia thus saved the life of the Republic. Moreover, that the Russian people are the most hospitable and humane on earth; that civilization and Christianity demand a common sympathy and aid from nations as well as individuals.

Therefore, the undersigned, having had large opportunities of knowing, asserting only what he believes, prays that this Government come promptly to Russia's aid by the donation of food and money.

1. Cornmeal, ground not too fine, made of white grain, having had plenty of sunshine, and kiln-dried to prevent souring, and then sacked, should be shipped by general order, at once.

2. This meal mixed with pure water, when milk can not be had, into a plastic mass, salted and baked well done on iron gridirons or smooth boards, is a wholesome and nutritious and palatable food. I eat it every day. This bread is in the vegetable world what eggs are in the animal economy, and our pioneers and the Indians made hunting and war excursions on it ("parched corn"), and did well without other food.

3. Southern cooks who are experts should be sent on to form schools to teach the Russians the art of making corn bread. Yellow corn—extreme northern corn—without sun, oil, or flavor, with condiments, and too finely ground, is the cause of distaste for corn bread.

4. Money should be donated, to be distributed under Russian control, for the purchase of seeds, as oats, spring wheat, etc., for next year's crop.

5. The Americans are now expending millions on the Columbian Exposition for 1893. This is well enough, but let this pride of display be cut short and the money be given to the starving men, women, and children of Russia. This would be more useful and glorious than anything that can be done at Chicago.

CASSIUS MARCELLUS CLAY.

WHITE HALL, MADISON COUNTY, KY., December 16, 1891.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House proceed to consider the Senate resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia moves that the House proceed to the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. KILGORE. I make the point of order that under the rule adopted yesterday it is the duty of the Speaker to refer the Senate resolution to the appropriate committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has stated what course it would take.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit that the parliamentary law of this body requires the consideration of that measure in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will first state that till the consideration has been entered upon or pending consideration it is within the power of the House to refer the resolution. The Chair has already indicated that he would hold that a motion to refer would have precedence over a motion to consider; and the gentleman from Texas, if he desires to have a reference of the resolution, can accomplish that purpose by making a motion to refer, which the Chair has indicated has precedence over a motion to consider.

Mr. HOLMAN. But my point of order went one step further.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. While no code of rules has been adopted, the Chair thinks that the gentleman from Indiana is correct.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, so far as I am concerned I have no objection to the House going into Committee of the Whole to consider it.

Mr. KILGORE. I make the motion, Mr. Speaker, as indicated by the Chair, that this joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. That committee has the right to report at any time, and it is not required to give it that power.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the question. The gentleman from Texas moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, with leave to report at any time.

Mr. KILGORE. No, sir; I did not ask that, for it has that power under the law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Very well; the Chair misunderstood the gentleman's statement. The gentleman from Texas moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The Chair thinks that is in order.

Mr. BUSHNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the resolution be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will suspend for a moment to receive a message from the President.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

RELIEF OF SUFFERING IN RUSSIA.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, on the question of jurisdiction——

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I want to submit a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. KILGORE. I understand that a motion to refer is not debatable.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that until the previous question has been ordered debate may be had on this proposition.

Mr. KILGORE. Then I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the gentleman from Georgia has the floor. [Laughter.] The Chair entertains the motion of the gentleman from Texas for reference, but will recognize the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BUSHNELL. I ask that the resolution be read, that it may be understood.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution has been read once, but if there be no objection it will be reported again.

The resolution was again reported.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish first to call the attention of the House to the question raised here as to the jurisdiction of this resolution. It is urged that the Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction of it, and that that committee has the right to report at any time upon any measure that may be referred to it. The Committee on Appropriations, as well as others—the Committee on Military Affairs, the Committee on Naval Affairs, and others having jurisdiction of appropriations—have their jurisdiction specifically assigned to them. The Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction of "appropriations of the revenue for the support of the Government as herein provided, viz: for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses, for sundry civil expenses, for fortifications, for the District of Columbia, for pensions, and for all deficiencies."

Upon these matters the Committee on Appropriations have the right to report at any time, but beyond this they have no such power. It was intended to vest the Committee on Appropriations with this authority, because these matters relate to the machinery of the Government; but there never was and there never has been in that committee in and of itself, anything that should give to it a power not given to any other of the committees of this House. There was a reason for giving that committee that power, and the power may be exercised within the range of that reason; but beyond that the committee has no such right as is claimed for it here. Now, this pending proposition relates to a use of the Navy of the United States which can not properly take place except by the legislation of Congress.

The Secretary of the Navy has no power to use a Government vessel for any purpose that is not authorized by law. Therefore the question of this change of the law pro tanto is by the very rules of this House specifically referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. The jurisdiction of that committee to make recommendations to the House in regard to the law governing the use of the Navy excludes, if the other point that I have discussed does not, the idea of the Committee on Appropriations having jurisdiction of this matter.

Now, sir, I had hoped that there would be no objection to the reference of this joint resolution. I delight in the conservative tendency of the rule and practice of this House which requires that important matters shall be considered by committees before the House undertakes to legislate in regard to them. But the character of this joint resolution is such that it appeals at once to the humanity of the entire country. It is a simple proposition. Liberal donations have been made by the American people for the relief of the starving people in Russia, and there is no proposition here to take money out of the Treasury for that purpose. It is simply proposed to lend certain vessels of the United States, or, if that can not well be done, to make an appropriation of $100,000 to procure vessels to transport these supplies to sufferers in Russia.

Deferring to a disposition existing in this House not to act hastily, I have sought to have this matter referred to some committee with the right to report it any time, because without that express authority the resolution may not be reported promptly, so that the consideration of it may be postponed for weeks or for months.

Now, what precedents have there been for this action? In 1847 the Congress of the United States provided ships for the conveyance of relief to the suffering Irish people. In 1880 the two Houses of Congress provided, just as this joint resolution does, for the chartering of ships by the Navy Department to transport supplies for the relief of the Irish people, with this difference, that in 1880, so eager was the American Congress to answer the call of humanity which came from distressed Ireland that the proposition was voted that there should be an indefinite appropriation, so that there should be no possible obstacle in the way of the consummation of the national wish.

Mr. KILGORE. I understand the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] to quote two precedents in relation to Ireland. There are always demagogues enough in the country to pander to the Irish vote. I do not, therefore, ask the gentleman about that, but I ask him whether he can point to any provision of the Constitution which authorizes the making of this appropriation? That is the question.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, when we have determined to consider this resolution the question of its constitutionality, which is now raised by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] will be in order, and it will be competent for this House, if it finds that it has not the power to pass this joint resolution, to vote it down. I am now inviting the attention of this body to the propriety of considering it now, rather than being put substantially in the attitude that we will not consider it at all.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I quite agree with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], that the Committee on Appropriations has no jurisdiction to report this resolution at any time unless that jurisdiction is given by the House. I do not care to enter now upon the question of jurisdiction as between the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Naval Affairs, inasmuch as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has not made a point of order upon that question; but, if I did not misunderstand the gentleman from Georgia, he moved to proceed to the consideration of this resolution now.

Mr. BLOUNT. I did. I made that motion for the reason that objection was made to giving the committee the right to report the joint resolution at any time, which meant that this measure was not to be considered at all, or at least that it was not to be considered for months.

Mr. DOCKERY. Would it not be in order, under the view of the gentleman from Georgia, to move to refer the matter to the Committee on Naval Affairs, with the right to report it any time?

Mr. BLOUNT. I have no objection at all to that; but the question has been raised as to the reference of this resolution to the Committee on Appropriations, and that is what I have been discussing.

Mr. DOCKERY. The point upon which I insist is that this matter should be considered by some committee, and I am quite willing that that committee shall have the right to report upon it at any time.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not care what committee considers it. At one time it seemed that the Committee on Foreign Affairs might have jurisdiction of it. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] claims jurisdiction of the question for the Committee on Naval Affairs. I do not care whether that committee or the Committee on Appropriations or some other committee shall consider the matter; but I think that in view of the action of this House in the past it well becomes this great Democratic majority not to put this manifestation of national sentiment under its feet.

Mr. SNODGRASS. The gentleman will allow me an inquiry in regard to the precedents in matters of this kind. Have not the resolutions of this character, for the relief of suffering in Ireland, been referred in previous Congresses to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. BLOUNT. No, sir. I have before me the report from the Committee on Naval Affairs in 1880, made by Mr. Whitthorne, of Tennessee, then chairman of that committee, bringing a matter of this kind before the House, and the House agreed to the adoption of a Senate bill carrying out the object.

Mr. SNODGRASS. How was it in 1847, when the first appropriation of this character was made?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. At that time there was no distinct Committee on Appropriations eo nomine, but the general subject of appropriations was a part of the jurisdiction of the Committee on Ways and Means. The duties which had previously belonged to the Committee on Ways and Means were divided and distributed about the close of the war, when Mr. Thaddeus Stevens was chairman of that committee.

Mr. CULBERSON. But that committee with its combined jurisdiction made the report referred to.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. That may be possible; I have not looked into that matter.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will detain the House only a moment further; I had not thought of discussing this matter at any length.

I have not before me the record of the action which was taken in 1847 in this House. In the Senate the measure came from the Committee on Naval Affairs. Though I have not before me any record as to the action of the House, my impression is that it also came from the Committee on Naval Affairs in this House. Be that as it may, however, the latest action of this kind by this House was in 1880; and the rules in relation to the jurisdiction of matters of appropriations are practically the same at this time that they were in 1880. It is thus shown what has been regarded as the appropriate jurisdiction with reference to matters of this sort.

Mr. Speaker, before yielding the floor, I would like at this stage of our proceedings to take the opinion of the Chair on the question whether or not, if this proposition be voted down, the Chair will then entertain a motion to refer this resolution to the Committee on Naval Affairs with the right to report at any time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that the latter part of the proposition would require unanimous consent.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire then, Mr. Speaker, that the House may see the real attitude of this resolution. If the proposition to refer this resolution to a committee, with the right to report at any time, is subject to be defeated by the objection of a single individual, and thus this resolution postponed for months, while the starvation of humanity is going on, awakening the sympathies of the civilized world, I hope the House will vote down the proposition for reference, and agree to consider the measure now. Let it be amended if the House so desires, but let it not be stifled.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT].

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire how my friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] happens to have control of all the time so that he can yield to the gentleman from Alabama?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Georgia has yielded to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. KILGORE. The gentleman from Georgia has his own time; and the gentleman from Alabama, I take it, would have his own time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that there being no regular code of rules it is somewhat embarrassing to determine exactly the line in which the debate should run. But in the absence of any limitation of debate, it has been the custom to allow each member in discussion an hour. The Chair will, however, recognize the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] in due time.

Mr. KILGORE. I assume, from what I understood to be the ruling of the Chair, that no gentleman can control any time except that which he chooses to occupy himself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has been so long the practice to allow each member an hour on any matter under discussion unless there has been a specific limitation of time that the Chair will in this instance follow that practice. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Texas later. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] will proceed.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, the measure before the House consists of two branches. The first proposition is that the Secretary of the Navy shall be authorized to use naval vessels for transporting to some port in Russia food supplies donated by the people of the United States. Considering this proposition by itself there can be no doubt that under the rules of the House the Committee on Naval Affairs, and that committee alone, has jurisdiction of the proposition.

Then comes the second proposition—that the Secretary of the Navy, if he finds himself unable, with the naval vessels at his disposal and suitable for the purpose, to transport all the provisions which may be donated, shall have authority to use $100,000, or so much of that sum as may be necessary, to carry out the purposes of the resolution.

If that proposition stood by itself, then it may be admitted that the jurisdiction over this matter would be properly, if the House did not order otherwise, in the Committee on Appropriations. Therefore we have here a case of concurrent jurisdiction between two committees. This is not an unusual condition. There are many instances of it which will occur to every member of the House. There are many measures or resolutions introduced before the House of which two, three, or even four committees would have concurrent jurisdiction. In order, therefore, to decide which one of two or more committees having concurrent jurisdiction of a proposition or resolution should have control of it for examination and report, we are to look at what is the gravamen of the proposition itself, taken as a whole.

It seems to me that this is clearly found in the first proposition embodied in this resolution, namely, that the Secretary of the Navy shall use naval vessels, as far as practicable, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the resolution. That, I say, is the gravamen of the resolution, and much more is that the case when we find that the appropriation provided in the second branch of the resolution is itself to be entirely under the control of the Secretary of the Navy. In other words, the second branch of the proposition, or the second proposition as a whole, is really an adjunct of the first.

So, Mr. Speaker, it is perfectly clear in this view of the case that it is the duty of the Speaker of the House, if that question should be left to him, to refer the matter to the Committee on Naval Affairs. But, as I understand the position of this matter before the House now, it is not left to the Speaker to decide upon this question of reference. There is a motion pending which is to be decided by the House itself.

I move, therefore, Mr. Speaker, as a substitute for that motion, if it be in order at this time, that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, with leave to report at any time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the proper way to reach that point would be to vote down the motion of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HERBERT. Then I ask the House, that being the view of the Chair, to vote down this proposition, in order to make way for a motion which I shall submit myself, if the gentleman from Georgia does not do so, that the whole matter may be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, with leave to report at any time, or with instructions, if need be, to report in ten days. I will make the motion in that form, and it seems to me, sir, that the House ought to take that course in this matter.

It is clear that this is the proper course, because we ought to be accurately and fully informed, after an examination of the question, as to how many naval vessels can be used, or what vessels can be used for the purpose of carrying out the intent of this legislation before the House can act intelligently upon the motion. I, therefore, if the motion of the gentlemen from Texas is voted down, will submit that motion, in case the gentleman from Georgia does not do so.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, the only question before the House now, as I understand the matter, is a choice as between committees. The advocates, the partisans of this scheme—measure, or job, or scheme, whatever you choose to call it——

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman from Texas allow a question?

Mr. KILGORE. Yes, sir; but it seems you are a little "previous." I have not got started yet or concluded a sentence. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLOUNT. I have to be "previous." We have to do that in order to keep even with you. [Laughter.]

Mr. KILGORE. Very well; what is the question?

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Texas says the only difference is as to the jurisdiction of these committees.

Mr. KILGORE. I said as to a choice of committees.

Mr. BLOUNT. Very well. Now, I am willing that the gentleman shall have his choice of committees, if he will agree that whatever committee it goes to may have leave to report at any time.

Mr. KILGORE. Has not the Committee on Appropriations the right to report at any time?

Mr. BLOUNT. General appropriation bills and nothing more

Mr. KILGORE. I say, Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of choice between two committees, and the advocates of this measure want it to go to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs himself contends that it properly belongs to that committee. There is evidently a "junket" in this scheme for naval officers and other agents and employés of the Government.

Now, I can not see why they should object to its going to the Committee on Appropriations, who would investigate the matter and report speedily, if the exigency of the case demanded a speedy report.

I suppose the Committee on Naval Affairs are prepared to report now. If we give them the right to report at any time, that will give the advocates of the measure the right to call it up at any time, and that makes it a privileged question. We have lost sight of the main question, which is as to what committee shall have jurisdiction of this case. I do not see why we should hesitate to trust the Committee on Appropriations, composed as it is of the average men of the House—I will not say the best men [laughter], but composed of the average material of the House, and perhaps those best fitted for that committee of any of the members of the House. Why not let it go there? But we have drifted away from that question and gone into a consideration of the merits of the case. I really think, Mr. Speaker, that the proposition as to the authority of Congress to enact this character of legislation should go to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that committee should be required to report as to the authority of Congress in the premises.

But just a word or two as to the merits of this question. In Texas some years ago we had a famine which covered thirty counties of that great State and included thousands of people. It was a drought-stricken country; fearfully stricken, too, it was. People were compelled to surrender their homes and the accumulations of years of toil and privation on the frontier, and to move back to the settlements to save themselves and their families from starvation. Texas came before Congress with a proposition to extend to them relief—charity if you please—in the nature of an appropriation of $10,000 to buy seed for distribution among those people, and the Texas people were met with the objection that the Government had no authority to expend money for such purpose; that the only purpose——

Mr. RAINES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Texas yield for a question?

Mr. KILGORE. Well, not now. I do not wish to be disturbed at this moment. I was saying that the people of Texas were met with the objection that all appropriations must be for public purposes and not in the interest of the few; that it was the business of the people of this country to support the Government, and not the business of the Government to support the people; that it could only levy taxation for the purpose of paying the legitimate expenses of the Government, properly and economically administered. And I heartily concur in that view of the Texas bill, and the same rules ought to apply to this measure. It is not the duty nor is it in the authority of Congress to dispense charity to our own people. It is not an eleemosynary institution.

But if the Government has not the authority to extend charity to our own people by appropriating money collected from the people to pay the expenses of this Government, it certainly has not the authority to extend charity to Russians, to people abroad, whatever may have been done heretofore on this subject.

Now, it was stated in the papers yesterday that there were destitute families here in Georgetown. It has been stated in the papers that in the State of Durango, in Mexico, thousands of people are dying of starvation. Every year, as the years go by, suffering will exist somewhere. Every year communities are stricken by flood, by epidemics, or by famine. And every year and every day Congress would be called upon to extend charity to suffering people in every quarter of the globe if we should countenance this policy by adopting this resolution.

This resolution has never been submitted to a committee. It was introduced in the Senate and passed fifteen minutes after its introduction. It never has been considered with any deliberation anywhere. Let it go to the Committee on Appropriations, which is, in the main, responsible for the appropriations that this body must make. Let that committee consider it, and when they have considered it let the House take it up and dispose of it. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN] for five minutes.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. COMPTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. COMPTON. My point of order is this: As yet this House has adopted no rules under which to operate, and it therefore must be operating under a code which is familiar to very many of us here on both sides of this House, denominated general parliamentary law. Under that code debate upon a proposition for reference is not to be had. There is no rule of general parliamentary law which allows debate upon a motion for reference; much less does it allow debate upon the merits of the pending proposition. Gentlemen are extending this debate away from the naked question of the reference into the field of the merits of the question pending behind the proposition for reference, and I maintain, sir, that all this debate is out of order, and I make that point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair held that it was the right of the House at this time to consider the measure, but that the proposition to refer took precedence, and the Chair thinks that debate is in order at this time.

Mr. COMPTON. Does the Speaker hold that the motion is debatable?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair so holds.

Mr. COMPTON. I will not appeal.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, the people of Nebraska have had raised against their appeal for governmental assistance a principle which is involved in the bill under discussion. In the summer of 1890 the western portion of our State was visited by an unparalleled drought, and many of the people living on that land usually so fertile and productive were brought to actual want. Private charity was first exhausted, then the State made a liberal contribution, and finally, at the request of the State Legislature, the members of Congress from Nebraska, together with the members elect, appealed to the Fifty-first Congress for additional aid from the Federal Treasury. We were met by the proposition that the General Government had no authority to appropriate money raised by taxation to care for its citizens temporarily in need. Precedents were cited to sustain the position, and I am satisfied that the decision reached by Congress was correct, although the application of the principle at that time was unfortunate for our people.

Last season our State was blest with a bountiful harvest, and her people, in company with sister States of the Northwest, have contributed liberally from their abundance to aid the inhabitants of Russia who are suffering as our people suffered a year ago and from the same cause. Their generosity is commendable and the object worthy.

It is to be hoped that a full share of the munificence of our people will reach those subjects of the Czar who bear the double burden of want and persecution. It might be proper to suggest that if other sections of our country whose industries are less susceptible than the farmers' to the influence of the weather were as liberal, transportation for the gifts of the Northwest could easily be provided without an appeal to Congress. But we are now asked to appropriate $100,000, if necessary, to charter a ship to carry the food to Russia.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, what right have we, even if we had a full Treasury, which we have not, to provide for the carrying of the products of Nebraska to the suffering inhabitants of a foreign land, when we had not the authority last year to aid the distressed citizens of Nebraska?

As has been suggested, scarcely a year passes but some country is afflicted by flood or famine. Shall we aid them all? Will not a precedent be established? Will not other nations, and those, too, more like ours in form of government and more humane in the treatment of their own citizens, justly feel offended if we withhold from them the aid which some gentlemen seem willing to grant without investigation to one of the most despotic of nations? If this appropriation is made, Mr. Speaker, I fear a case may arise which will appeal as strongly to our sense of justice as does this to our sympathies. Our friends on the other side have been boasting that the McKinley law is throwing out of employment thousands of workingmen in foreign countries and bringing them to actual want.

If it is our duty to aid those in other lands whom God in His wisdom has permitted to suffer, how much more imperative the duty to relieve those whom an American Congress in its folly has caused to suffer! [Laughter and applause.] It may be proper, if we have vessels convenient for the purpose which are not in use, to furnish these for the transportation of donations as an act of courtesy, but certainly this House will not attempt to charter private vessels for that purpose. I hope the bill will be referred to the committee, so that an amendment may be reported back, striking out the appropriation of $100,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. Before the gentleman takes his seat I would like to ask if his object to have an amendment reported would be forwarded by reference?

Mr. BRYAN. I want to be sure that an amendment would be made, and I think that is the safest way. If the committee after consideration fails to report an amendment, an amendment can be made by the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. The resolution being referred to the committee, that would not necessarily follow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAINES].

Mr. RAINES. Mr. Speaker, I had originally supposed——

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make an inquiry.

Mr. RAINES. Later on. [Laughter.]

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I want to know in whose time the gentleman from New York is speaking?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman in his own time. The gentleman from Texas, so far as the Chair observed, did not reserve the remainder of his time.

Mr. RAINES. Mr. Speaker, I had supposed that when this resolution came before this House it was one that had been evolved from the inner consciousness of some philanthropist for the benefit of the suffering and starving people in Russia. I find, judging from the remarks of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE], that this is a resolution which is for the benefit either of the Naval Committee or the Committee on Appropriations, and is not in the interest of retrenchment and reform. Yesterday we had a resolution which was in the interest of retrenchment and reform, involving the amount of $60, and reform and retrenchment lost the day. [Laughter.] If this resolution is to go to the Committee on Appropriations it is suggested that retrenchment and reform will win $100,000 possibly, and that the Naval Department will be out that amount of appropriations.

Now, in regard to what the gentleman said as to the propriety of such an appropriation or expense of money, I want to ask him who has discovered that the American Congress had no right to make appropriations from the United States Treasury for the relief of the distressed and starving inhabitants of Texas? Was it the late President of the United States or was it not? The discovery has not been patented, Mr. Speaker. The American Congress is capable of deciding this question for itself. There is not a man on this floor who is not just as familiar now with this whole subject as he will be after we shall get a report covering ten lines from the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee on Naval Affairs. He knows the suffering exists; he knows the citizens of the Northwest and of the East are ready to contribute to their relief, and that they have petitioned this Government to provide the means for sending the provisions to their destined ports. He knows, if he has read the papers, that the Naval Department have decided that they have no shipping capacity to transport these provisions, and hence this appropriation of $100,000 is asked, so that they may provide the means for conveying these provisions where they are needed.

Now, I say for one, and I think I speak for others around me, that we are opposed to any reference to any committee of this measure. I think we understand what is wanted. I think that if this charity amounts to anything, and is to do any good or is to accomplish the purpose designed, that the sooner it is carried out and they receive the benefit the better. And we are ready to vote for the proposition, not to refer, for there is no rule that requires its reference; but for the present and immediate consideration and immediate relief to the distressed. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Speaker, if the advocates of this measure will point to any authority whatever, either expressed or implied, for passing this appropriation I do not think there will be ten dissenting votes in the House. The House would almost by unanimous consent agree to furnish the means to carry this charity to the distressed and suffering people of Russia. But while gentlemen are discussing the merits of the measure, they overlook the fundamental fact that this House possesses only delegated powers, and that there is not a line or syllable in the Constitution which authorizes, either directly or impliedly, the action which those who advocate this measure ask us to take.

For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I do not see how any Democrat can vote for it, especially those who have for the last twelve months been writing to their constituents that there was no authority under the Constitution for the passage of the subtreasury bill; that under the Constitution of the United States we could not grant any relief to the agriculturists of our own community; that we could find no warrant in law for lending them money on any terms at all; I do not see how any Democrat of that kind can give his consent to vote for an appropriation of money which can not even be advocated under the general welfare clause, because that clause is confined to the general welfare of the United States.

I will say to gentlemen who are advocating this measure, that if they can find any authority, either expressed or implied, in support of this proposition, I am ready to vote for it; but in the absence of any authority at all, I do not see how any member can, in view of his official oath, conscientiously support it.

I agree entirely with the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. RAINES], that we are just as well informed in regard to this matter now as we shall be after it has been considered by a committee and reported back, and that the measure ought to be taken up and considered and acted upon now. If this relief is to be extended at all, it ought to be done at once, without unnecessary delay.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with my friend from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER] and the gentleman on my right [Mr. RAINES]. If the committee to whom this matter is referred does its duty—and the presumption is that every committee will do that—this House will be much better informed than they are now by the report of that committee in regard to the necessity or the absence of necessity for this action. It would be the duty of the committee to ascertain the facts and report them to this House as a basis for its action. We have some information now, but to my mind it is of an unsatisfactory character. Russia is a great nation of eighty or ninety millions of people. Where is the evidence before us that that Government is unable to take care of any portion of its own suffering people? And ought we not to have such information before we vote money out of the Treasury for this purpose?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

Mr. OATES. I will yield for a suggestion.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I understand that the joint resolution before the House simply proposes to provide means of transportation. My information is that the substantial relief itself—flour and other food—has been already provided by corporations and individuals, citizens of the United States.

Mr. OATES. I thank the gentleman for that information, for I had it not before; but it does not change my view as to the necessity for further information. If contributions of charity which have already been made or agreed to be made for the relief of any portion of the people of Russia can not be transported by the Russian Government, then it must be that the distress is not very great, or else that Government is very negligent in making proper provision for its suffering people, and we have no right to assume, in the absence of proof, that any government would be guilty of such inhumanity.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Will the gentleman permit me to make a suggestion just there?

Mr. OATES. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I desire to make a statement which may throw some light on the matter under discussion. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] is probably not aware that on yesterday the president of the Red Cross Association, which bears a certain official relation to the United States under an international treaty, addressed a petition or letter to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House, accompanied by official communications from the gentleman at present in charge of the Russian embassy here, the Russian minister himself being absent. In those communications two statements substantially are made: first, that the suffering in Russia is great; second, that the acceptance by the Russian Government of the contributions of the American people would be grateful.

Another statement substantially made was, that while Russia would undoubtedly transport whatever America had to give, the time which would thus be occupied would be just about twice what would be required for us to transport this relief; because the cargoes, the contributions of Iowa, Nebraska, and other States, being accumulated at New York, where they have come over our railroads, they could be put upon ships provided by us under this resolution, and could reach Russia just about the time that the Russian ships could reach America. I make this statement because it is in the line of the gentleman's inquiry, and because these papers have happened to come under my eye.

Now, if the gentleman will allow me, I want to call his attention to another question, because I know how much he has studied this matter and what authority any statement from him carries. I wish to ask him whether he has any doubt of the constitutional power of Congress, in a matter of foreign intercourse, intercourse between us and foreign nations, to vote an appropriation like this—a doubt which I confess I was much surprised to hear expressed by so very admirable a constitutional lawyer as my friend from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER].

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I will endeavor to answer the questions of my friend in the order in which he has put them. His first statement is but cumulative evidence to show the necessity for an investigation of this subject by a committee. It is stated by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE], as well as by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], that contributions have been made for the relief of the sufferers in Russia, and that speedy action is invoked in order that transportation for those supplies may be provided. If the necessity be so great to relieve the suffering in Russia, the gentleman's statement that it would take a great while for ships to come from Russia to transport these supplies is not an argument why this Government should expend $100,000 in chartering vessels for such transportation. If there is force in the gentleman's suggestion as to the delay which would be occasioned by ships coming from Russia, then let Russia charter the vessels which she can find here to transport the supplies.

I want to be informed as to all these facts before I vote for such an appropriation, if, indeed, I vote for it at all, and upon that point I reserve my judgment. So, sir, I am in favor of a reference of this joint resolution. I would be in favor of referring it to the Committee on Appropriations if the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] were so amended as to allow that committee to report at any time. I think it should go to that committee if the gentleman's motion were so amended; but if there be no rule which allows that committee thus to report, then I would be in favor of the proposition of my colleague [Mr. HERBERT] to refer the resolution to the Committee on Naval Affairs. I do not share in the apprehension of the gentleman from Texas that this is a mere junket and that the Committee on Naval Affairs would report without investigation. I take it for granted that this committee or any other committee charged with such responsibility would investigate, thoroughly investigate, the necessity for the passage of this resolution and report to the House the facts, and nothing but the facts. The facts are what we want. We want to know just what we are doing.

I am not in favor of the hot haste which would appear to be desired by the gentleman from New York on my right [Mr. RAINES]. That gentleman said that he would like to know from the gentleman from Texas or from some other gentleman who invented the idea that Congress has no constitutional right to appropriate money for the relief of the suffering people in any portion of this country and to vote public moneys to charities. He wanted to know whether that idea did not originate with President Cleveland, who vetoed the Texas seed bill. I can inform the gentleman that no one has a patent upon that discovery. It is old and sound Democratic doctrine that Congress has no such power; but his party, in view of the precedents they have established, are entitled to a patent for disregarding constitutional limitations in this respect. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But, sir, the question in regard to such power is not a new one; it is an old one. It has been discussed in the Congress of the United States for many years and on different occasions. And in answer to the question propounded by my friend from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] I will say that I have very carefully examined on previous occasions the debates upon the appropriations for the relief of suffering caused by the earthquake at Caracas, and for the relief of the starving Irish during the famine of 1848 as well as in 1880, the periods referred to by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT]. From my investigation, it seems to have been the conclusion of a majority both in the Senate and in the House upon those occasions that the Constitution of the United States is a limitation upon the power of Congress within the territory over which the Constitution was intended to operate; in other words, that it is a limitation upon the parties to its creation; and although it seems paradoxical to say that Congress may aid the people of other nations with charity voted out of the Treasury but has no right to vote such charity to any portion of our own people, yet that seems to be the fact beyond controversy to the mind of any lawyer who will thoroughly investigate the question.

This results from the fact that the Constitution is a compact—national, it is true, in regard to every power by it delegated to or vested in the Federal Government; but that Government, under the decisions of the Supreme Court as well as by the best precedents of Congress, has no power except that which is derived from that instrument with reference to any matter within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States. But, sir, when this nation deals with another, it does not act through the States, but as one nation. It is so recognized by other nations. Great Britain does not know any compact or agreement entered into between Massachusetts, New York, Georgia, and other States; she knows only the Government of the United States and deals with us as such. It was perhaps wisely left by that instrument to the sound discretion of Congress and the President to decide what powers may properly be exercised in dealing with other nations. This is almost a necessity, if not absolutely such, when you come to consider our relations with other nations.

But the case is different in respect to our internal affairs. When you read the history of the convention which framed the Constitution and of the conventions of the States which ratified it, you will see there the jealousy of the people for the rights and powers and privileges of their respective States, so that they were very chary of giving much power to the Federal Government and none, except such powers as were clearly delegated or granted. Hence the limit to the Federal Government, that it has no powers save such as are granted to it in the Constitution or such as are necessarily implied from express grants. What are implied? Why, sir, every power which is necessary in order to make the express grants efficacious and give them force and validity, but nothing more. Congress is invested with the choice of means to do this; as Chief Justice Marshall said, if the means are appropriate and adapted to the end they are constitutional. Farther than this the framers of the Constitution thought proper not to go; they thought proper to deny to Congress any other powers than those delegated in the instrument to be exercised over the people who were parties to its creation; but as to other peoples, as to foreign nations, there is no limit, and Congress can do whatever it pleases, being responsible to the people.

Congress, if it sees fit, has the power to pass this appropriation.

As to the question whether it should be passed or not I for one prefer to have information which will satisfy me that it is a proper and rightful appropriation to be made. I think, therefore, it ought to go to a committee. If I am to be forced to vote upon the measure in the absence of such information all I can do is to record my vote against it. If you show me that the measure is right, that it appeals to the hearts of us, that this is a real charity, one which ought to be granted where we have the power to grant it, I would favor the proposition. But in the absence of such information I can not vote for the measure. I hope, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that the resolution will be referred to one of the committees which have been suggested.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES], before he sits down, to what has probably escaped his observation—the fact that the President of the United States has officially called the attention of the House to this matter by a special message presented here yesterday.

Mr. OATES. That was probably very proper on the part of the President. He should regard with proper consideration and tender care the relations of this Government to all others, and it was therefore right and proper that he should call the attention of Congress to the question. But it does not follow that we should pass this resolution.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I was simply calling the attention of the gentleman to the fact in order to meet his suggestion that we might act with undue haste or before the necessary information was obtained, to show that this information was already in hand. It comes to us from the executive department of the Government, which has considered it.

Mr. OATES. I think it would be undue haste to pass a measure of this kind without proper reference to a committee under any circumstances. But when referred to a committee, and the committee examines the questions involved carefully and reports the conditions existing and all the facts to the House, I am then prepared to act upon it. I trust that step will be taken. It is not a matter of such grave importance as to require that it should be acted upon to-day. A day or two will not make any material difference, I imagine. I want the committee to have an opportunity to examine it and report upon it, and to report at any time, so that we may know that it is right, and I must know it before I can vote for it. If forced to vote without such investigation I shall feel it my duty to vote against it.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to take any part in the discussion of the merits of the question presented at this time, but simply to address myself to the proposed reference of the joint resolution to a committee of this House for examination and report. I believe that if there is any merit whatever in the charity proposed by this resolution it should not be delayed. To-day is the time for us to act, whether for or against it.

I reserve to myself, sir, my judgment in regard to the merits of the resolution; but I believe that there is no need of the investigation the gentleman from Alabama suggests. This question of the needs of the Russian people has been investigated and brought to our notice by a greater committee, so far as searching power is concerned, than this House can name—the press of the United States of America. They have investigated the needs of that people, and we all know to-day whether Russia requires the assistance of the outside world or not.

I am opposed, therefore, to the reference of the resolution to any committee. Let us pass upon the question now and dispose of it, whether we shall transport this grain and these products to the people of Russia or whether we shall defeat the suggestion entirely. Now is the time.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry, with a view of facilitating action upon this matter if possible. There is now pending, as I understand it, a motion to refer to the Committee on Appropriations?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the motion of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] gives notice that if that motion is voted down he will move the reference of this resolution to the Committee on Naval Affairs, with the right to report at any time. Now, I wish to know whether the Chair will entertain that motion or whether it is in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hold that it is in order to refer with instructions.

Mr. BLOUNT. With instructions to report at any time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. With instructions, but not with leave to report at any time.

The Chair will state that it would also entertain the motion as an amendment to the motion of the gentleman from Texas. On an examination, the Chair thinks that it would be in order to move that as an amendment; in other words, that, like any other proposition, it is amendable.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then, again, Mr. Speaker, if the House shall vote down these several propositions, neither of which contains the right to report at any time, will the Chair entertain a motion to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution at the present time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has held that the motion to commit being voted down, the resolution would be before the House for such disposition as it might see proper to make of it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] to withdraw his opposition or request, and that this joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs with the right to report at any time.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I suppose it is not a matter of any particular importance what committee considers the question so it is considered by a committee and properly reported and is properly before the House. I have had a number of my colleagues to suggest that this would be a fair solution of the matter, to withdraw the proposition to send it to the Committee on Appropriations and let it go to the Committee on Naval Affairs, to report at their pleasure. I am inclined to do that. They brought much pressure to bear on me, and I suppose I will have to give up. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard for a few moments only on this question of reference.

It is a very unusual thing for any member of the House of Representatives to object to having any measure sent to his committee, as all of the members of this body know; and I have no objection whatever to the reference of this proposition to the committee of which I am a very humble member, if it is to be referred at all. But I think it my duty, at this point, to call the attention of the House to the very obvious fact on the face of the resolution itself, and the circumstances surrounding it, that there is neither necessity nor excuse for referring the resolution to any committee.

The President of the United States in his brief message sent here on yesterday has stated the whole matter plainly. He has only stated what everybody who reads the newspapers knew in advance. He has stated the facts in regard to the prevailing distress in Russia. He has stated the facts in regard to the prompt efforts on the part of liberal-minded citizens of the United States in the Northwest to provide flour and other food products for the relief of these starving people; and he has also stated the condition of the Navy Department in regard to furnishing transportation for such supplies.

He says in his message:

> The Secretary of the Navy has no steam vessel at his disposal that could be used for the transportation of these supplies, and I therefore recommend that he be authorized to charter a suitable vessel to receive them.

I understand the fact to be, Mr. Speaker, that when this matter was suggested to the Secretary of the Navy it was first proposed to tender the use of the old frigate Constellation for the purpose. I believe this historical old vessel has been used upon a similar errand in the past; but the capacity of that ship is limited. It would be impossible for that vessel to carry all the provisions required, and therefore, if another vessel is necessary to be chartered, the Secretary could just as well provide for sending the entire amount in a swift vessel, so that the beneficence of our people would be promptly received.

Mr. Speaker, "the quality of mercy is not strained." There is no necessity in this case for straining it through a committee of the House of Representatives. We know that the distress exists. We know that some of our generous people have come forward to vindicate our feelings of humanity, to vindicate the sentiments of friendliness existing between these two great nations, by tendering timely and prompt offerings of relief to a suffering people.

Let us not seek by technicalities to delay this generous and worthy act. The Constitution of the United States ought not to be pleaded against a case of humanity where the liberality and generosity of our Government and our citizens toward foreign peoples are involved. There was nothing in the constitution of France that sent Lafayette here to tender the use of his sword in behalf of the young Republic. There was no organic provision for the tendering of the services of Rochambeau and De Kalb, Von Steuben, Pulaski, and all those other heroic men who came across the sea to mingle their blood with that of our own defenders of liberty and to write their great names on the brightest pages of our country's history.

Mr. OATES. Does not the gentleman know that at that time France was a monarchy?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Certainly.

Mr. OATES. Then why is the gentleman talking about the constitution of France?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I say there was nothing in monarchical power or the traditions of royalty that could restrain that expression of sympathy on the part of the people of France toward the people of this country struggling for freedom. I say, Mr. Speaker, that this House owes it to itself to emulate the promptness and the grace with which the Senate have acted, and to pass this resolution unanimously and speedily.

Mr. BLOUNT. I shall not detain the House, except for a moment. I have taken occasion to examine the RECORD in relation to the action of Congress in 1847 and in 1880, in matters exactly similar to this. In each case the question was examined by a committee of the House and by a committee of the Senate before final action was taken by either body. Never before has a resolution of this kind been disposed of by being brought forward on the motion of a Senator and passed through the Senate, and disposed of in the same way in the House. I say this because I think it but due to this body to vindicate itself from any charge of a lack of fair consideration of this measure.

I would be quite willing to vote upon it at this time, but I do not think it unseemly at all to wait. The Committee on Naval Affairs may report this matter to the House under this agreement to-morrow morning, and we may then dispose of it. There never was such urgency in the consideration of a question of this kind in 1847 or in 1880.

I am in entire sympathy with my friend from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE]. It is a question of humanity that appeals to all of us. But the matter of a day and of deliberate and regular consideration of it does not impair the character of our acts. I now ask unanimous consent that this joint resolution may be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, with the right to report at any time, and I trust there will be no objection.

Mr. PENDLETON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from West Virginia rise?

Mr. PENDLETON. Mr. Speaker, several propositions are involved in this question, to which I think the attention of this House ought to be called. In the first place, we have no evidence whatever at present that there is any disastrous famine prevailing in Russia. I have here an article, published a few days ago in the Washington Post, supposed to come directly from high officials of the Russian Government, which states that this distress is entirely under the control of the Russian Government. Further, Mr. Speaker, why should not the distress, as reported in the newspapers, be under the control of the Russian Government? It is a Government which contains more than 8,000,000 square miles of territory, and has a population of nearly 120,000,000 of people, when you include Russia in Europe and Russia in Asia.

We are further informed that the Russian Government has to-day in gold, lying about in the great banks in the different cities of Europe, nearly $150,000,000; money that is absolutely under control of that Government to-day, and which that Government can call for at any time or moment that it desires to make the call.

That fund is not called for by the Russian Government to relieve the poverty and distress of the Russian people, because Russia to-day is reserving it as a war fund. If she needs help she can use it, but she does not need it, and there is no reason why we should make contributions. Russia as she stands to-day is a menace to modern civilization. She is a threat to the peace of the world, reserving her funds for war purposes and conflagrations; and the evidence that the American Congress has before it is that the famine, concerning which we are talking, is one that that Government can readily control if it desires to. All it has to do is to use a portion of its own surplus funds. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] talks about the traditional friendship that prevails between this country and Russia, and says that for that reason we should send supplies to that mighty Government. Can we have friendship between tyranny and liberty; between Asiatic despotism and modern civilization; between the inertia of barbarism and the spirit of progress? There is no friendship and there can be no friendship between such opposing forces. I hope the hour will come when we can clasp the Russian hand in honest and cordial friendship, but that day should not come until the Tartar has mended his ways; until Poland is free; until persecution for opinion's and religion's sake shall have ceased, and until constitutional government shall prevail from the Baltic to Bering Sea.

If there is any friendship between the two Governments, it is certainly a friendship of the Puritan and a blackleg, if a friendship of that character could prevail between such governments as the American and Russian Governments. Why, gentlemen, when you consider the question of sending charity to Russia, a question that the American liberty-loving citizen would ask is, Are the Jews of Russia, who to-day are being persecuted and driven forth from their native land by the hundreds of thousands, to receive a portion of this magnificent charity which our Government is to confer with a free hand upon the Russian people? If that question can be answered satisfactorily, there are men in this House who would probably vote an appropriation of $100,000. The Hebrews would not receive the value of a dollar, and the whole of it would go to the very people that are urging forward the most wicked and heartless persecution the world ever saw. I for one would not vote it when I am perfectly satisfied that the Russian Government is perfectly capable of taking care of its own people.

Further, this House of Representatives is supposed to have been elected on the issue of retrenchment and reform; and are we to begin at once by appropriating $100,000 for the benefit of the Russian people, when that Government can take care of her own, instead of appropriating $100,000, if we are to appropriate it at all, for the relief of American citizens who might be found within a radius of a hundred miles of the city of Washington.

I believe, sir, that this resolution should not be referred to any committee, but that it should be considered at once and voted down; first, because it is unnecessary; second, because we are pledged to retrenchment and reform; and third, because it is unconstitutional.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that this resolution be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, with leave to report at any time. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Texas has withdrawn his motion to refer.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. In the event that the committee report back the measure, would it then be before the House with any additional rights resulting from the consent now given to report at any time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana that the right to report at any time has always, so far as the present occupant of the chair knows, been held to carry with it the right to consider at any time.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the consent now given to this motion would not waive the right to demand its consideration in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would not waive any right that attaches to it under general parliamentary practice. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say if there is no limit placed upon the time in which the committee are to report I shall certainly object. If the House is going to make an appropriation to help the unfortunate and suffering, the sooner it be made the better; and I ask the gentleman who makes the motion to refer it to the Committee on Naval Affairs if he can state in what time it will be ready to report? If he does not so state I shall object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not know what the wish of the gentleman is in that regard.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Then I move that the committee be required to report within ten days.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from New York that the right to report at any time carries with it the right to report within one day.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I understand that precisely; but I wish that it shall not be longer than ten days; and I make that motion as an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York couples the request of the gentleman from Georgia with the additional provision that the committee shall report within ten days. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York as a modification of the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. BLOUNT. I have no objection.

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. What is the request?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That the report shall be made within ten days. [After a pause.] Is there objection?

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, do I understand that it requires unanimous consent to refer to the Committee on Naval Affairs with instructions to report within ten days?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does. That request is made, coupled with the privilege of reporting for consideration at any time.

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. I object.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House proceed to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall oppose that motion. I move, in lieu of the motion made by the gentleman from Alabama, to refer this measure to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does the gentleman propose that they shall have leave to report at any time?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection; but it is objected to by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STONE].

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Georgia will allow me, as I understand the effect of the ruling as made by the Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama will suspend until order is restored.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, I was about stating to the House that, as I understood the effect of the rulings made by the Chair this morning, if this motion is made to refer this resolution to the Committee on Naval Affairs, it can not be coupled, without unanimous consent, with a leave to report at any time; but I understood the Speaker to say that it would be in order to refer it with instructions. I want to ask if it would not be in order to refer it to the Committee on Naval Affairs with instructions to report within ten days?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks it would.

Mr. HERBERT. Therefore, if the gentleman from Indiana will permit, I will submit that motion for him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama moves to refer the joint resolution to the Committee on Naval Affairs with instructions to report within ten days.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw the motion which I submitted.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLOUNT. Would that motion if adopted carry with it the right of consideration when the matter is reported back?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is a question which the Chair would prefer to look into a little before giving a definite opinion, but at present the Chair is inclined to think that it would not. The motion limits the time within which the report can be made and requires the committee to report within that limit, but the Chair does not remember an instance in which such an instruction has been held to carry with it the right to consideration when the matter is reported back. The Chair, however, will examine the question carefully.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to ask another question of the Chair for the guidance of the House in its action. I would like to know whether it is the opinion of the Chair that when this joint resolution is reported back by the committee it will simply take its place on the Calendar like any other measure.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has stated his impression that the reference made in this way does not carry with it the right to have the matter considered when reported; but the Chair also stated that that was a mere impression, and that he would look into the question when it was raised in the House, and would be governed, of course, by whatever examination should show to be the proper ruling.

Mr. ENLOE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ENLOE. As we are proceeding now without any rules, if the committee should report this joint resolution back within ten days, we still being without rules, might not the majority of the House take up and consider that report at any time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks it would be in the power of the House to consider it in any way and time that was not forbidden by any rule or established parliamentary practice. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama to refer this joint resolution to the Committee on Naval Affairs with instruction to report within ten days.

Mr. DICKERSON. I move to amend by striking out "Naval Affairs" and inserting "Appropriations."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that that was the original motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE]. Did the gentleman from Texas withdraw his proposition to refer the joint resolution to the Committee on Appropriations?

Several MEMBERS. He did.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky would be in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that my friend will withdraw that amendment.

Mr. DICKERSON. I will withdraw it, Mr. Speaker, at the request of the gentleman from Indiana, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BLOUNT. I trust, Mr. Speaker, that this disposition of the matter will not be made.

Mr. HOLMAN. The proposition is withdrawn.

Mr. BLOUNT. What is withdrawn?

Mr. HOLMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. DICKERSON].

Mr. BLOUNT. Did the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STONE] withdraw his objection?

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. No.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I understand that this is a proposition to refer the matter to the Committee on Naval Affairs with instructions to report within ten days.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. BLOUNT. And that is what I rose to speak to. I hope that the House will observe the situation in which this disposition of the matter would place us. The Chair has already indicated that it is at least doubtful whether, when this matter is reported back, it may be taken up on motion of the Committee on Naval Affairs. He has distinctly announced to the House that the right to report at any time here given is negative, and therefore we are confined to the question whether we shall consider this joint resolution now or postpone it indefinitely. Now, I submit, sir, that such dallying with a question of this character is without any precedent in the House of Representatives or in the Congress of the United States at any time in the past. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I trust that the gentlemen who constitute the overwhelming majority in this House for the Democratic party will, with a feeling of proper pride in the American people, take action now, as our fathers took action upon like occasions [renewed applause on the Republican side]—Webster, Clay, and a whole list of names that are honored in the history of this land, men whose fame was so bright as to dazzle and paralyze anyone who should have made the suggestion of a "job" in regard to a measure which they advocated.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if this were a matter that required any vast amount of information, I would rather have delay. I would rather take chances. But it is not such a matter. There are but two propositions embraced in it. The donations for the relief of these suffering people are already made by American citizens, given freely by our own people, and we have here simply a proposition to allow naval vessels to be used for the transportation of these supplies, and, beyond that, a proposition that in case naval vessels can not be found to answer the purpose, the sum of $100,000 may be utilized to charter other vessels. Now, some gentlemen are insisting that we have not the constitutional power to appropriate this money. Very well; if we have not, let us strike out the $100,000. Let the House express its sense upon that question. Let us strike out the $100,000, if that is the judgment of the House, and let our naval vessels be used for this transportation.

I wish to say right here that in 1847 only the ships of the Navy were authorized to be used; there was no appropriation of money; and that was a time when we were engaged in the Mexican war and had an extraordinary demand for ships and men for naval purposes in connection with the war. I believe, sir, there would be no danger in the House taking up this matter now and striking out the appropriation of $100,000. We should then have a simple proposition which we might go forward and adopt. I trust, therefore, that as we can not authorize a committee to report the resolution back at any time, we shall vote down the proposition for reference, and take up the joint resolution now. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would like to ask the gentleman whether our Government is prepared to send any ships abroad at this time—whether we do not require them at home to protect the honor of our Government and the flag of the country.

Mr. BLOUNT. I leave that question to my friend from New York.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama to refer.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 70, noes 99.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered, only 28 voting therefor.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House now proceed to the consideration of this joint resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order that this is a measure involving an appropriation of money, and that, according to the parliamentary law which has been in force for over a hundred years as the law of this House, the measure must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLOUNT. I acquiesce in the point of order. I have no objection to the consideration of the resolution in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ENLOE. I make the point, Mr. Speaker, that it is not in order to proceed to the consideration of this resolution at the present time. We ought to be, and I suppose if the objection had been made at the proper time this morning we would now be, proceeding to execute the special order made yesterday. By the terms of that order it is specifically provided that:

> Immediately after the reading of the Journal on Tuesday, January 5, 1892, the executive and other communications on the Speaker's table shall be laid before the House, to be referred to the appropriate committees, and thereafter the States and Territories shall be called for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions, memorials of State and Territorial Legislatures, for reference to appropriate committees, according to the provisions of Rule II, Fiftieth Congress, so far as the same is applicable, and shall proceed until the call is completed.

Now, I make the point of order that this being a communication upon the Speaker's table it could not be laid before the House under the terms of this special order unless it had been laid before the House yesterday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state in response to the point of order made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE] that this resolution came over from the Senate yesterday and was laid before the House, and unanimous consent was asked that it remain upon the Speaker's table. It was again laid before the House this morning. The House has been engaged in the consideration of the question; it has had the resolution before it, and the Chair thinks that even if the agreement of yesterday did not cover the question the gentleman's point would come too late.

Mr. ENLOE. I wish to say that the House has been considering the question of reference, which might, perhaps, properly and rightfully come up for determination; but the present proposition is to consider the resolution itself, and I say such action is prohibited by the distinct terms of the order adopted yesterday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will remind the gentleman from Tennessee that the first ruling of the Chair on this subject was that it was in order to move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution, but that the motion to refer would take precedence. The gentleman from Georgia indicated that he desired the consideration of the proposition; and the debate was entered upon.

Mr. ENLOE. I differ with the Chair; but I shall not press the point of order further.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], who has charge of this matter. The question which will go to the Committee of the Whole will be with regard to the appropriation of the $100,000; and perhaps the House will give unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia does not oppose the consideration of the resolution in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the gentleman from Indiana desires that action I have no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. Inasmuch as there is perhaps a single question which will come before the Committee of the Whole, my suggestion is that the House, by unanimous consent, consider the measure in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], that the joint resolution be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole? The Chair hears none; and it is so ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, if the measure is now before the House for consideration I wish to submit a motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will first report the title of the joint resolution, after which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will be recognized.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to transport contributions for the relief of the suffering poor of Russia.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by striking out the last clause of the joint resolution—the one making the appropriation of $100,000.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the words which the gentleman from Indiana proposes to strike out.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following words:

"And if necessary to charter and employ under the authority of the United States a suitable steamship or ships for the same purpose. Any sum of money not to exceed $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to carry out the object of this resolution, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, in support of that motion I wish to submit a few remarks. It is believed by gentlemen who are thoroughly well acquainted with the condition of our Navy that there will be no trouble whatever on the part of the Secretary of the Navy in supplying the necessary ships to transport these supplies to Russia. Naval officers perhaps will not like the work. Armaments will have to be removed and all of that, but no public interests will suffer.

In the next place this transportation, it should be remembered, is to be provided for the benefit of the people of a wealthy empire, one of the greatest powers of the globe, and it would seem hardly reasonable that the people of the United States should not only contribute with the generosity which always characterizes them to the relief of the hungry in Russia, but at the same time their Government expend a hundred thousand dollars for the transportation of such supplies from our ports to Russia. The Russian Government hardly merits at our hands such extraordinary consideration.

A great and wealthy power like Russia can well perform that duty for her own people. I hope, therefore, the motion to strike out will be adopted.

I wish to add my cordial indorsement of what has been well said on the floor of the House during this discussion, that in the present condition of our Treasury a positive degree of economy is expected of us by our people. To secure the object of this munificence does not require the appropriation of this $100,000; and I trust the House will not agree that this item of unnecessary expenditure should remain in the bill. If Congress thinks these contributions of our generous people to the famishing people of Russia should be transported by us to the Russian ports, instead of Russia using her navy for that purpose, then our Navy clearly should be employed. Can you employ our Navy in any better way? Ships of war are only well employed in such a humane service. The officers of the Navy may not like this kind of work, but it is absurd to say that provision to feed people can not be shipped on war ships. It is the only use you have for them, at least for the present.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, I hope this motion of the gentleman from Indiana will prevail. To the gentlemen of my own party I desire to address myself very briefly. I do not think it worth while to say anything to the gentlemen immediately upon my right. I do not expect any member of this House who is responsible for the billion-dollar appropriations of the last Congress to vote in favor of this amendment. I take it for granted that every gentleman on this side of the House will vote solidly to commit the present Congress, as the very first step it shall take, in favor of this appropriation of $100,000 of the people's money for the purpose of extending charity abroad.

Mr. BYNUM. Will the gentleman from Alabama permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. HERBERT. Certainly.

Mr. BYNUM. I would like to call the attention of my friend to the fact that the amendment proposed will simply strike out the limitation and leave the Secretary of the Navy free to employ ships without limit of cost.

Mr. HERBERT. I do not know that the gentleman is correct in that proposition, but I take it for granted that the gentleman from Indiana, who proposes the amendment, will see that it is in proper form.

Mr. BYNUM. It should also strike out these words—and, if necessary, to charter and employ, under the authority of the United States, a suitable steamship or ships, for the same purpose.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I think the gentleman from Indiana misunderstands the object of the amendment. If I understand the amendment correctly, it proposes that the Secretary of the Navy shall hire a ship, but the Russians shall pay the freight.

Mr. HERBERT. I will yield to the gentleman from Indiana to make what correction is necessary by way of an amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is not necessary as an amendment. It simply amounts to this: The Clerk did not read the last clause of the bill which I propose to strike out. The original amendment, of course, embraced the entire proposition embodied in that clause of the resolution.

Mr. HERBERT. Well, I favor the purpose of the amendment, and took it for granted that the gentleman from Indiana would see that the amendment is so framed as to effect his purpose.

Now, the simple question presented at this time to the House of Representatives is just this: Shall the first step a Democratic House takes be to vote this expenditure of $100,000 of the people's money? Why should we do it? Is not Russia able to do that for herself? What reason can be given for it? Why, if it be the duty of Russia, shall we take it upon ourselves? I do not oppose the use of a ship, one or more, if they can be properly spared for this purpose; but I do say that the Democrats of this House ought to pause and consider well before committing themselves to an appropriation of this character.

Russia is one of the greatest governments in this world. In population and in extent of territory she far exceeds our country. Her Government is able to charter ships, and can to-day secure them by telegraph as speedily as we can. There is no reason why that Government can not charter to-morrow morning by telegraph every ship to be found in any port of America necessary to transport these donations. Russia knows better than this Government does whether her people are suffering. She knows whether they need these provisions. It is her duty to take care of her people. She is able to pay for the transportation of these donations, etc.; therefore I am opposed to the payment of this money out of our Treasury. It is said there are precedents for this proposition. If so, they are dangerous—dangerous in the extreme, and I think we should make haste to turn the face of the Government in the other direction. I do not care to occupy the time of the House in arguing the constitutional question. I put it simply upon economical grounds. I say if the people of Russia are suffering the Russian Government ought to know better than this House can without having made any investigation as to the facts.

Mr. TURNER. The gentleman from Alabama seems to assume that the Government of Russia is not only able to provide this transportation, but that it is her duty to do so as well?

Mr. HERBERT. Yes, sir.

Mr. TURNER. If that assumption is correct, is it even charity on our part to provide it?

Mr. HERBERT. Well, it would be much like the charity of many of these associations throughout the country that are formed for looking after the condition of the heathen of Borioboola-Gha while they neglect the indigent and suffering at home. The gentleman means that it would really be an extravagant waste of the people's money, and in that I agree with him.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I sincerely trust that a Democratic House at the beginning of its administration will not be guilty of drawing so paltry a distinction as to send public ships abroad and higgle over appropriating the public money for the employment of private ships for the same purpose, when this is more economical and much more efficient. We own no vessels; and this is the only mode in which we can furnish relief.

This is sticking in the bark. If we are going to furnish relief let us do it as becomes a great nation, without higgling over so small a matter. To pretend to send is to give no relief. We have no ship of the Navy that can do it. It is simply "giving promise to the ear and breaking it to the hope." But if we intend to do, let us do it in good faith; let us charter these ships, load them with the contributions of the teeming Northwest, and send them as the contribution of the American people in an era when suffering makes all the world akin. This is the true ground upon which our fathers put it in 1847, the ground upon which that stalwart Democrat, Whitthorne of Tennessee, put it in 1880, whom I was willing to follow when he was in the House, and whose precedents I am willing to follow now.

It is constitutional; it is humane; therefore it is American, and therefore it is Democratic, and I for one am willing to take Democratic responsibility for it. If we are not going to do it, let us say so frankly. Let us say "we have not the power" or that we have not the will, or that we do not think that in this day we ought to furnish contributions to anybody in any national aspect. Then the country and the world will understand that in the intercourse of America with foreign people, we can commit war, we can cover our seas with our ships of war, we can give medals to sailors, we can decorate those who have saved our ships in foreign ports, we can thank Russia for relieving Melville in the Arctic Ocean, but that we are powerless to aid out of our abundance when God has blessed us with sunshine and rain, and when out of the fertile bosom of our American soil has came a teeming crop, and He has given scarcity and famine to others; that there are constitutional and partisan difficulties which make us stand by and see the suffering die and famine stricken people go to the grave. [Applause.]

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Certainly, I always yield to the gentleman from Alabama with pleasure.

Mr. OATES. The gentleman's language is so eloquent that it is difficult for me to find a place where I can afford to interrupt him.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. There is no time when

I can not find a place to be interrupted by the gentleman from Alabama with pleasure. [Applause.]

Mr. OATES. Is not this appropriation for the purpose of transporting breadstuffs for the relief of suffering in Russia to go through the Russian Government?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I do not know whether it is to go through the Russian Government, or whether it is to go through that remarkable association which is in every nation, and known as the Red Cross Association.

Mr. OATES. Did not the gentleman state——

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. One moment. If it goes through the Russian Government, it will undoubtedly be properly distributed. And certainly the gentleman from Alabama is not willing to say by his action, as a diplomatic slap in the face of Russia, that she and her officers are not to be trusted with the distribution of our charity to her own suffering people.

Mr. OATES. The gentleman anticipates what I did not intend by the question. He goes beyond it. I understood the gentleman awhile ago to state that the larger part of his information was derived from the representative of the Russian Government here. It therefore seems that the Russian Government is accepting it for the relief of her suffering people, that the necessity is great, and that it would be gladly accepted. Now, is it any hardship, if that be true, that the generous contributions made by the people of this country for the relief of the suffering subjects of Russia should be transported to them at the expense of the Russian Government? If the Russian Government recognizes it and proposes, from all the evidences we have, to see to the distribution of these supplies, is it any hardship that that Government should pay the expense of transportation? It is not only the donations from our citizens for the relief of the suffering—if there be great suffering there, which I doubt not—but it is going further and asking an appropriation out of the Treasury of the United States to supply transportation, which Russia ought to supply for itself.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. But it is simply this: The citizens of the Northwest bring in their hands cargoes of breadstuffs and lay them down by the aid of the railroads at the port of New York. They have no transportation there. The American Government takes that contribution and lays it down at the port of Russia. In that way no time is lost. While we are debating suffering is increasing. It is simply a question, shall we do that which we do as a gentleman, graciously, or shall we do it niggardly and hesitatingly and incompletely? [Applause.] If we have the power to put it into the warehouse in New York, shall we not take it out of the warehouse and put it where the starving can get at it without further delay?

Mr. OATES. Does the gentleman consider it niggardly to inquire whether it be a proper appropriation of the people's money?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. With the permission of the Speaker pro tempore, I will say that I voted for the reference. That was voted down by the House, and now it is a question of consideration. I would have preferred it to have passed without the motion for reference. I would like this House to have done as the Senate has done, simply to have said without any debate, without any partisan reflection, without any other thing than the graciousness of a rich nation that has heard the story of suffering, to say, "Out of my abundance I do my part to relieve the suffering of people whose very suffering makes them akin to us."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate upon the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. DOCKERY. I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri moves to strike out the last word, and will be recognized.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, upon the threshold of this session, and whilst entering upon the consideration of the first appropriation we are asked to make, it may be well to invite the attention of gentlemen on this side of the House to the actual condition of the public Treasury.

The responsibility for the expenditure of the people's money, in so far as it has the approval of this body, must rest upon the Democratic party. I confess, sir, that I share the apprehension expressed by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] that our friends of the minority may not at all times unite with us in exacting the most rigid scrutiny and economy in respect to the items and aggregate of appropriations. However this may be, it is beyond cavil that the country has the right to insist that Democratic Representatives shall hold fast to their pledges and limit expenditures to the actual needs of the public service.

Mr. Speaker, the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury shows the "net cash balance" in the Treasury January 1, 1892, to be $34,574,128.30. The items of this apparent surplus are subsidiary and minor coin, $14,108,985.35; deposits in national banks, $15,437,669.91; and cash in Treasury vaults, $5,027,473.04.

Deducting the unavailable item of subsidiary and minor coin, which is referred to by the Director of the Mint in his annual report as "an incubus of uncurrent coin," it is obvious that the available cash balance upon which the Treasury Department must rely to meet maturing and past-due obligations is but $20,465,142.95.

Although Secretary Foster's statement discloses an excess of expenditures over revenues for the first half of the present fiscal year of $273,464.57, it is yet probable that the current revenues, together with the meager Treasury surplus, would be entirely adequate to meet the demands of an economic administration, were it not for the overlapping and overdue liabilities imposed by the billion-dollar Congress.

The aggregate liabilities upon the national income for the present fiscal year are $544,531,672.55, but after deducting the amount required by the sinking fund, together with the estimated postal receipts, we ascertain the liabilities for ordinary current expenditures to be $422,501,521.29, or $211,250,760.64 for the half year just closed. The expenditures for the same period having been but $176,018,751.88, it becomes manifest that $35,232,408.76 of the appropriations are still unpaid.

In addition to this outstanding liability, the accomplished clerk of the House Committee on Appropriations [Mr. Courts] estimates that the unexpended appropriations of the last fiscal year aggregate $30,256,177.80. In other words, of the appropriations made by the billion-dollar Congress for the last fiscal year, and the first six months of the present year, there remains $65,488,186.56 unpaid, with a Treasury surplus of only $20,465,142.95, whilst current expenditures are outstripping current revenues.

If to this unpaid mortgage upon the resources of the Government is added the $25,364,500 of 4½ per cent bonds refunded and the $49,224,928.65 demanded by the obligations of the sinking-fund act, it becomes apparent that the matured national indebtedness now aggregates $140,077,615.25.

Mr. Speaker, in the presence of this fiscal exhibit, an actual Treasury deficiency is apparently imminent and inevitable. Indeed, sir, the officials of the Treasury have been compelled to tax their ingenuity to the utmost in order to avert such a disaster, pending the Presidential contest.

It was the lavish appropriations, Mr. Speaker, of the last Congress, coupled with the anticipated reduction of revenues by prohibitory tariff duties, which compelled the Republican party to wrest from the holders of the national-bank notes $54,207,975.75 and cover it into the general Treasury. Of this enforced loan $32,679,299.25 is yet an outstanding liability. It was augmenting expenditures and dwindling revenues which coerced the Administration into a suspension of the sinking fund, and the refunding of $25,364,500 of the bonded indebtedness maturing September 1, 1891. It was the same fiscal exigency confronting the Secretary of the Treasury which induced him to change the old form of stating the national debt so that the "chips and whetstones" of the public Treasury, with its trust and reserve funds, should be made to take the place of the people's money, which had been wasted in prodigal and partisan extravagance.

The condition of the Treasury, Mr. Speaker, may be briefly summarized in the statement that the available surplus is now but $20,465,142.95; current expenditures surpass current revenues; appropriations aggregating $65,488,186.56 are unpaid; the Administration has been constrained to ask an extension upon $25,364,500 of the bonded indebtedness of the Government; whilst actual default is made in $49,224,928.65 required by the provisions of the act establishing the sinking fund.

Now, Mr, Speaker, having concisely stated the Treasury situation, I am constrained to enter an earnest protest against the contribution of $100,000 proposed by the Senate joint resolution.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Missouri withdraw his pro forma amendment?

Mr. DOCKERY. I do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the bottom of the resolution the following words:

"It is the sense of the Government of the United States, in the passage of this bill for the relief of the sufferers by famine in Russia, that no discrimination shall be made in the distribution of these supplies against the citizens of that Empire known as Israelites or Jews."

[Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the Chair understand that this is offered as an amendment to the amendment? If not, it will not be in order at this time.

Mr. MORSE. I do so offer it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve the point of order upon it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia reserves all points of order upon the amendment. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MORSE. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that I am entirely in sympathy with the bill now under consideration.

Mr. BLOUNT. Do I understand that the point of order is reserved?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair stated that the gentleman from Georgia had reserved all points of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would as soon make it now, or hereafter, as the gentleman from Massachusetts may prefer.

Mr. MORSE. I will occupy my five minutes, if I am allowed to, at this time, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. MORSE. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that I am heartily in sympathy with this bill. I believe that it ought to pass. I am opposed to the reference of this resolution to any committee and am in favor of its immediate consideration. However cruel or wrong the Russian Government may be in the treatment of its subjects that is no reason why this grain and these supplies contributed by the benevolent people of the Northwest should not be forwarded to the starving people of Russia. But it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, since it is a fact well known to the people of the United States that 5,000,000 citizens of Russia, known as Israelites or Jews, are subjected by the Russian Government at this time to the most cruel and relentless persecution, I think that no harm can arise from coupling these words of mine to this bill and to this contribution from our Government, or from our citizens, for the relief of those starving people.

The wrongs done these Jews can only be known by reading the Russian laws and edicts with reference to them. I may refer to simply one of them. Whenever a Russian family for any cause is banished from the country in which they lived, the Russian law provides that if there is a daughter in the family she may remain if she will take out a license as a woman of the town. I think that any government that will be guilty of such a damnable law as this and other similar laws directed against 5,000,000 of its subjects deserves to have it made known, and no harm can come from telling the Russian Government that we are cognizant of the facts; and no harm can come from my suggestion that even-handed justice shall be done these people in the distribution of these supplies in the manner I have indicated in my amendment.

Mr. CHIPMAN arose and was recognized.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I desired to be heard on the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the gentleman desires to go on now I will suspend action on the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order will be considered as reserved, and the gentleman will have the benefit of it.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Mr. Speaker, this is one of those occasions which are frequent in the history of men, when a proposition is made to be generous with money which does not belong to them. I am very well aware that there may be a certain amount of odium attached to opposition to this joint resolution; yet to my mind there are a hundred reasons why it should not pass, or at least why it should not pass without the most careful consideration. I was forcibly struck by the remarks made by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN], who adverted to the fact that when the people of his section were in distress we in our seats here could find no way to aid them. A strict constitutional construction was invoked, and no gentleman then arose to announce that the tie of misfortune made us all akin. I remember it very well. No such sentiment as that was indulged in upon that occasion, but an ironclad construction of the Constitution was enforced, and the necessities of our own flesh and blood went unaided, unrelieved.

I have been struck, too, by the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] as to the condition of the Treasury, and without going into that subject at length, I simply say that it behooves us, under the circumstances which bring us here in so great a majority, to scan every item of expense with regard to its necessity as well as to its constitutionality.

I for one am very glad that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] has proposed his amendment. It is a serious question in my mind whether Russia, treating the Israelites and the Poles of that country as she is treating them, is entitled to the comity which prevails among civilized nations. I have, I say, strong doubts upon that question, while she is pouring into our midst hundreds and thousands and tens of thousands of these famine-stricken people; not only driving them out from their homes by lack of food, but by civil and religious persecution, and throwing them upon the hands of the people of this country to be taken care of.

I am ready, sir, to perform that work generously and to receive those people with open arms; but at the same time it occurs to me that a nation that can cast its people forth, its bone and sinew, so prodigally, as that nation is doing, that can be guilty of the oppression which that nation is guilty of, has no claim upon the sympathy of a republic like the United States. And for that reason alone, sir, if for no other, I for one would refuse to vote for this joint resolution here to-day.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Does the gentleman from Michigan draw no distinction in such a matter as this between the government which may be guilty of the acts of which he has just spoken and the suffering poor who have no voice in the commission of those acts, but only share in the suffering?

Mr. CHIPMAN. I have thought of that, and my thought takes this shape, that it would be well for the people of that country to understand that their Government is outlawed from human sympathy; that it can expect no comity so long as it continues these oppressions; and I believe that that would be one means of stimulating them to rise and throw off the fetters which bind them.

Mr. PENDLETON. Does not the gentleman from Michigan know also that the very people who are forcing the Russian Government to persecute the Hebrews and Poles there are the Russian peasantry themselves?

Mr. CHIPMAN. I understand so. It is said that their ignorance, their prejudice, their bigotry, their hatred of the Jewish and Polish peoples in a religious way are such that they are foremost in leading on that crusade, which simply shows that they are under a government which makes slaves of them all.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with much interest to the discussion of this question. I listened with very great interest to the eloquent remarks submitted by the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], but the questions with me are these: First, has this Government, under the Constitution, the right to appropriate money for any purpose except it be a governmental purpose; and, second, is this a governmental purpose? Has this Government the right or power to engage in the distribution of charity out of the public Treasury? That, sir, is the difficulty with me. Notwithstanding the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from Alabama, as I read the organic law of the land, we have no power to appropriate, for any such purpose the money which is paid into the Treasury as taxes by the people.

Another question, Mr. Speaker. What has produced, in a large measure, this condition of affairs in the Empire of Russia? It has been the conduct of the Russian Government itself, which has shocked the moral sensibilities of the Christian world; and, so far as I am concerned, I am not disposed to make that Government the instrumentality for the distribution of American charity. These, Mr. Speaker, constitute the reasons which control me in my opposition to the passage of this joint resolution. So far as the suffering Israelites of Russia are concerned, I am one of those who feel a profound sympathy for them. Their kindred constitute a part of the constituency I represent, and I am rejoiced that their sufferings have shocked the moral sensibilities of the American people.

But let the charity of our people go out to the sufferers through their own instrumentalities, and not through the Russian Government.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Does the gentleman from Tennessee think it at all possible that the fact that there are a good many Jews in his constituency, and no other Russians, may cast some light upon the constitutional question as he has been studying it? [Laughter.]

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from Kentucky I take the position that this Government has no right or power to distribute charity in Russia either to the Israelites or to any other portion of the Russian poor. It is conceded by the gentleman from Alabama, who seems to have examined this question, that we have not the constitutional power to distribute charity to our own deserving poor; and if we have not that power, I submit to this House the question, have we the power or the right to distribute charity to the people of foreign countries? The Government of the United States is not an eleemosynary institution; and I desire here and now to enter my protest against the appropriation of money for any purpose, charitable or otherwise, that is not governmental and clearly within the limitations of the Constitution. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I favored immediate action upon this resolution, not because I favored the resolution, but because I believed it was our duty to act promptly in this matter one way or the other. It was a source of great pride to me to know that my own State of Iowa was first among those that raised these contributions for the suffering people of Russia. But it was a matter of greater pride that they were contributions and not appropriations. The people of Iowa, the people of Minnesota, the people of Nebraska, did not appropriate of the public funds, but they gave from their private pockets. I have observed here to-day that not one gentleman from the States that have contributed these amounts have said one word in regard to the matter of transportation; but it is the people who have not furnished one cent by way of contribution who are willing to vote out of the Treasury of the Government money which they would not give out of their own pockets. [Applause.]

For myself, I believe in charity. It is one of the graces that adorn true character and noble manhood; but it is not true charity on my part to give money from another's pocket instead of my own.

I oppose this resolution from beginning to end, so far as it proposes to make use of public funds. Nor is it so much a question of constitutional power as it is a question of moral right. No course of reasoning can in reality justify the use of public moneys for other than purely governmental purposes.

In regard to the amendment presented by the gentleman from Massachusetts, it would be received as a studied insult to the very Government it is proposed to aid. Supplies sent to Russia, labeled with a notification that the contributors demand that the distribution be so made as to meet the American idea of governmental duty, thus reflecting on the Russian policy of government, such supplies, I believe, would be returned, accompanied by the declaration that the Russian Government proposed to act in the matter, if at all, without advice or direction from other powers as to the manner of the distribution.

I oppose both the amendment mentioned and the resolution so far as it provides for the appropriation of money or the chartering of ships, and shall therefore vote to strike out the clause providing for such chartering and such appropriations.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, against which I have raised a question of order, is in the following language:

> It is the sense of the Government of the United States, in the passage of this bill for the relief of the sufferers by famine in Russia, that no discrimination shall be made in the distribution of these supplies against the citizens of that Empire known as Israelites or Jews.

Now, sir, we have before us in this resolution of the Senate a proposition to distribute or transport supplies which have been raised by contributions on the part of the people of several of the Northwestern States. Those people have not only done this, but they have appointed their agents to follow these supplies and make the distribution amongst the suffering people.

I repeat that the supplies to which this resolution refers are voluntary contributions of many citizens of the Northwestern States, which it is proposed shall be distributed under the direction of their own agents in certain districts in Russia. The resolution simply proposes that the Government shall lend the use of naval vessels, or shall expend not exceeding $100,000, in order to transport those supplies. That is the only question here involved. Now, I submit that upon a single proposition such as this to aid our own citizens in the distribution of supplies, it is not pertinent, it is not germane, to raise another question, and to place upon this joint resolution a declaration that it is the sense of this Government that there should be no discrimination in the distribution against persons known as Jews or Israelites.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLIKEN. These supplies, as I understand, are not supplies furnished by the Government of the United States?

Mr. BLOUNT. Not at all.

Mr. MILLIKEN. They come from the people of the Northwest?

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Then does not the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts amount to this: that the Government should undertake to direct how the supplies furnished by somebody else shall be distributed?

Mr. BLOUNT. Unquestionably that is the effect of the proposition. These people have raised supplies for a certain purpose; they are simply asking, or we are proposing, that they be transported to Russian territory through the agency of the Government; and on arriving there they are to be taken charge of by agents of those States, and distribution made by them. I submit that it is not germane upon a proposition like this to make a declaration in regard to the mode of distributing these supplies. That is a matter with which we have nothing to do, because this is not the donation of the Government at all.

I will not say anything as to the merits of the proposition until the Chair shall have ruled upon it; but I submit that it is entirely out of order, treating this as a donation from these people to be distributed to persons in the famine-stricken districts of Russia; it is entirely out of order for us to undertake to annex to the donations of these private individuals a declaration as to how they should be distributed. If the people of Minnesota or Nebraska or any other of the Northwestern States want to extend charity to Israelites or to any other class of persons, that is a matter to be directed by themselves, not by this House. I urge upon the Chair the point that under the rules it is not germane to attach to this resolution an amendment of this character.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This resolution embraces a proposition to transport certain supplies from the United States to a foreign country. It makes provision that vessels of the United States, and, if need be, the money of the United States, shall be used in such transportation. The amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts proposes to couple with this provision for transportation the expression or declaration that when these supplies reach their final destination there should be no discrimination made in the distribution between different classes of people supposed to be worthy recipients of the donations. The Chair is of opinion that it is not out of order for this House in making an appropriation to couple with it such a condition as that proposed in the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts. The position taken by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] may be a very good argument to show that the amendment should not be adopted, but the Chair thinks that it is in order to allow the House to act upon the amendment, and overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I trust, as the question is now before the House, that it will see fit to reject the proposition. There is not in the whole history of this magnificent charity on the part of these people of the great Northwest the slightest intimation, the slightest suggestion from any quarter or of any character that the relief given to the people of the famine-stricken districts of Russia shall not be equal and uniform and without discrimination as between all races of men found there.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman indulge me in a question?

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does my friend from Georgia believe, assuming that the reports we have received through the press are correct as to the condition of affairs in Russia, and the attitude of the Russian people, as a people, towards the Hebrews, and the Russian Government, as a government, towards the people—does he think that that very considerable portion of the population of that country who may stand in need of relief under the present circumstances are likely to receive any benefit whatever from this munificence on the part of our people?

Mr. BLOUNT. I will answer the gentleman's question, which might as well be called an argument interjected here, by saying that I not only suppose it, but I believe that these kind people in the Northwest who organized this relief and made these contributions, and who propose to distribute the charity by agents of their own, already appointed by the governors of the different States, will make the distribution in accordance with the necessities of the people of the country whom they seek to relieve.

Mr. HOLMAN. But does the gentleman not know that under the despotic system of Russia we have got to take into account its police powers, a power which is manifested everywhere; and in the districts occupied by the Hebrew people we can not organize a movement strong enough to secure justice in the distribution of these supplies?

Mr. BLOUNT. My friend from Indiana has many ways of making his attacks. Now he comes up and raises the question as to what the Russian Government will do in relation to a matter of this sort; and the gentleman from Indiana, venerable as he is in the public service, respected as he is by the people of this country, with the authority of his great name, is raising now in this House a question which is not creditable to him, nor prudent to be raised in the Representative Hall of the American people. It is, to say the least, not proper for this House by any legislative declaration to assume towards any friendly power a purpose to do that which would be contemptible in the eyes of any man on earth. There is no necessity for it, and there is nothing, except in the brain of the gentleman from Indiana, to warrant it. I scarcely think the thought exists that the agents of the governors of these several States, when they shall reach that country, will fail to see that this charity shall be delivered to every starving family within their reach, and with such a suggestion it would be, I think, competent for the Russian Government to guard itself against the assumption which such a remark implies.

I think we may well trust to the Russian Government to guard itself and its own good name in this regard. I know so well the methods of my friend from Indiana in this House that I can not believe this is a candid suggestion on his part. From the beginning he has fought this measure in every form in which it has been presented.

Mr. HOLMAN. No; I am in favor of the proposition to do just what we have done heretofore and use our Navy for a very proper purpose.

Mr. BLOUNT. Well, let us do it, and do not come and obstruct the doing of it by putting a proposition here which, if you are correct, is an insult to a foreign government.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, my friend is assailing me without any reference to my friend over yonder from Massachusetts. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLOUNT. I will take care of both gentlemen in due time.

If the gentleman from Indiana is the interpreter of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and I take it that he is—if he is the interpreter of that gentleman in this suggestion, which is but a declaration on the part of the House of Representatives of the United States that the Government of Russia is acting cruelly and inhumanly towards a portion of its people——

Mr. HOLMAN. Is it not true?

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to know of the gentleman from Indiana, as an American citizen, what he would think of the passage of such a measure towards this country on the part of any foreign government?

Mr. HOLMAN. Has not the whole civilized world denounced the conduct of Russia towards a portion of its own people?

Mr. BLOUNT. That is not the question. I care nothing about it. Let public opinion have its sway. Let us, when we exercise the limited powers conferred upon us, and which we are entitled to exercise under our form of government, pursue those methods which prudence and dignity prescribe, and not attack one of the great friendly nations of the world in a manner such as the gentleman suggests. If the gentleman from Indiana thinks it is right and the duty of this House to make this declaration, perhaps he would not hesitate to go further and make even a declaration of war against any government that was not republican in form and protected the rights of its citizens according to his own notions.

I say that if the gentleman from Indiana interprets correctly the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and I believe he does, for I think it is the purpose of the gentleman from Massachusetts to do exactly what the gentleman from Indiana has suggested, then I submit that this House of Representatives will not, without very much more careful consideration by some committee, make a declaration here which is calculated to disturb the good relations between this country and the Russian Government, and to affect our intercourse with them politically, commercially, or otherwise. Especially, Mr. Speaker, I trust that we will not take occasion to breed discord when we have before us a proposition to relieve suffering humanity by donations made by our own charitable fellow citizens of the great Northwest. If I believed that there was any purpose anywhere to use this fund for making a discrimination against the Israelites or any other class of people I would not consent to the use of a single vessel of this Government or a single dollar of its money.

This Government and the American people would recognize no distinctions of that sort nor justify it on our part. Let us not belittle this splendid action by this little, mean suggestion in relation to the possibility of the Russian Government, the Czar with his police power, taking up the representatives of our Government going on this friendly mission. If they shall be incarcerated, if our agents shall be imprisoned while in the performance of this act, then I expect to hear from the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] in the matter of a declaration of war.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BOUTELLE. I would suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] that he withdraw his amendment.

Mr. MORSE. I am not going to withdraw it, and in reply to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] who has seen fit to characterize this amendment which I have offered as mean. I will append to my remarks what I have not in my desk, but which I have at my hotel, a copy of several of the laws of the Russian code, and if the gentleman can find anything on God's green earth that is meaner than some of these laws, enacted against the Israelites, the Jewish citizens of that empire, I would like to have him tell me what it is. To say that they are mean does not describe it.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that 5,000,000 citizens of the Russian Empire are subjected to the most cruel, relentless, and heartless persecution. These poor men are driven from their homes, houseless, homeless, and friendless, to strange lands, without any trade or occupations. Thousands of them are coming to these shores, and charitable people throughout the length and breadth of our country are being compelled to support these starving and destitute people who are coming here. If the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] thinks my amendment is mean, I want him to turn to the RECORD to-morrow morning and read some of these Russian edicts against the Israelites; and then if he can find anything meaner than they are I want to know what it is. Now, Mr. Speaker, I say that any government that is guilty of such a crime as I have here described, that is guilty of enacting any such laws against any great portion of its people, as has the Czar's Government, has placed itself without the pale of sympathy and consideration of any civilized nation on the face of the earth, the United States included.

But while I entertain this view of the Czar's government and believe that no kindness shown to us in the day of our distress during the civil war, referred to by gentlemen, can atone for such crime against humanity, yet because the Russian people are suffering, because the innocent are suffering, I am in favor of this bill, and I was in favor of its immediate consideration, and I voted against referring it to any committee. But I fail to see, Mr. Speaker, what harm can arise from coupling this benefaction on the part of our Government (for that is what it is, because this Government proposes to send these supplies to the Russian people)—Mr. Speaker, I fail to see what harm can come to us or our dignity or what insult can be offered to that Government by coupling with this benefaction this suggestion that we desire these supplies distributed indiscriminately, without any discrimination against the Israelites or Jews of that empire.

Now, Mr. Speaker, once more I tell you that in the light of the Russian code appended, which I ask you to read, unless you couple my amendment to this bill, no Israelite in Russia will ever receive one single spoonful of that flour.

Below are appended the Russian laws with reference to Jews or Israelites. Especial attention is called to the last clause of No. 9:

A RÉSUMÉ OF THE CHIEF RESTRICTIVE LAWS.

RESTRICTIONS ON RESIDENCE.

1. The Jews of Russia have long been compelled—with certain exceptions only—to reside either in Poland or within the adjoining provinces known as the "Pale of Jewish Settlement," which contain comparatively few towns.

2. They may not live within fifty versts (about 33 miles) of the frontier. The effect is to prevent them carrying on trade with neighboring countries.

EXPULSIONS FROM VILLAGES.

3. Under the May laws, which prohibit Jews from settling "outside of cities and towns," those settled in villages since May, 1882, are expelled therefrom, and driven into the overcrowded towns of the Pale.

4. Under certain decisions of the Senate, Jews settled in villages before May, 1882, have the right of remaining there, but only provided they do not move therefrom. Many have been driven out who have settled there before because their names had not been inscribed as villagers, or because they had temporarily left the village, in some cases to perform their military duty.

5. Suburbs of towns and small towns have been in many cases declared villages, and the Jews have been expelled therefrom.

6. Under the May laws, Jews are prohibited from owning or holding on lease, or even managing land; nor can they take a mortgage of land. Those, therefore, who have the right to remain villagers, in consequence of settlement before 1882, can not find a livelihood, and must migrate to the overcrowded towns of the Pale.

EXPULSIONS.

7. Until lately Jews of all classes were allowed to reside in the Grand Duchy of Finland and in Courland. This year all who were not artisans or merchants of the first guild have been expelled and driven into the Pale.

8. Jews have lately been also expelled in large numbers from certain important commercial centers outside the Pale, such as Rostoff, on the Don, Tomsk, in Siberia, and other towns where, for commercial reasons, they had hitherto been allowed to settle; also from the transcaspian provinces, and from Batoum and other Asiatic places formerly owned by Turkey.

9. In all these cases of expulsion the Jews have to find the means of removal by selling off their goods and chattels, as they can not collect debts when they are known to be under orders to leave. If they then are unable to find money enough to pay for removal, they are forwarded to the Pale of Settlement, however distant that may be, by étape, i. e., in chains, by the side of condemned criminals, and under the guard of prison warders. Jewesses are, however, allowed to remain if they will apply for a yellow ticket and become enrolled as prostitutes.

10. The result of all these expulsions is not only to deprive of their livelihood the persons expelled, but also to injure the original inhabitants of the towns of the Pale, who have to sustain the competition of the new arrivals, to incur the burden of a crowd of pauperized people, and to find for them house space within limits that were already too contracted.

11. Besides expulsions from Russia proper into the Jewish Pale, a very large number of expulsions of foreign Jews have taken place, not only from Russia proper, but from the Pale itself. Any Jew unable to prove the place of his birth may be prosecuted, and, as registration was formerly a lax institution in Russia, prosecutions and expulsions of Jews as alien vagrants or as rogues and vagabonds (brodyags) are of no rare occurrence.

RESTRICTIONS ON EDUCATION.

12. The attainment by a Jew of the highest degree in any university faculty entitles him to the privilege of residing outside the Pale. A large number of Jews have hitherto been candidates for university distinctions, but recent laws have limited admissions not only to the universities, but to the gymnasia, the proportion fixed being 10 per cent in the Pale, 5 per cent outside it, and 3 per cent in St. Petersburg and Moscow. The Jews are not allowed schools of their own. In the special technical schools built and endowed by certain rich Jews the proportion of Jews admitted is limited just as if they had been established by the Government.

13. Jewish children attending the public schools are required to be present on the Jewish Sabbath.

ARTISANS' PRIVILEGES RESCINDED.

14. Skilled artisans and their families have hitherto been allowed to reside outside the Pale of Settlement. Under recent rules, if Jewish artisans residing in Russia proper are found inefficient in their trade, are not actually in work, or past work by reason of age, they are expelled.

15. Skilled artisans who formerly held the right of permanent residence in Moscow and St. Petersburg have lately been deprived of that right by an arbitrary and summary administrative order.

16. The definition of "skilled artisan" has been contracted for the purpose of excluding Jews. It has lately been declared that bakers, vinegar-makers, glaziers, printers' compositors, and other workers in light occupations are not artisans, and Jews carrying on these trades have been expelled from towns in Russia proper.

RESTRICTIONS ON OCCUPATIONS.

17. Jews are not allowed to sell intoxicants except in houses which they own. Jewish waiters may be employed only by Jews.

18. Jews are not allowed to engage in any mining industry, or to hold mining shares, or to act as agents for persons engaged in mining.

19. Those Jews who, as high graduates of a university, or as merchants of the first guild (men paying at least 1,000 rubles taxation annually), are allowed to reside outside the Pale, may have no more than two Jewish employés in their service. (A privileged Jew, who wishes his aged parents to reside with him outside the Pale, frequently registers the one as his valet and the other as his cook.)

20. Jews are prohibited from forwarding goods, as agents or employés, from frontier custom-houses to localities outside the Pale.

PROFESSIONS AND PUBLIC APPOINTMENTS CLOSED.

21. Jews are not allowed to occupy any government or public appointment. They have accordingly been dismissed from railway and post-office service, from the posts of schoolmasters, and from notarial offices. They may no longer be appointed doctors, or even veterinary surgeons, in the army. No Jew may become an advocate, though fully qualified by examination, without the special sanction of the minister of the interior, which has not once been given. No dentist or apothecary of Jewish extraction is to receive a license to practice. No Jew may become an officer in the army, though bound to serve in the rank and file, like all other Russians. The penalty of evading military service is higher for the Jew than for others. No Jew may serve in the navy.

22. No Jew may be elected mayor, councilor, or police magistrate, nor may hold any other town office. The law says: "The duties of judges can not be intrusted to Jews with convenience or decency."

SPECIAL TAXES ON FOOD, ETC.

23. There is a special tax, called the "box tax," levied on the animals killed according to Jewish ritual law—a tax payable on the slaughter of the animal and another on its retail sale. There are also special taxes on house property owned by Jews, on business profits of Jews, on the skull caps used by Jews during domestic prayer, and on the Sabbath candles used by Jews.

DIRECT RELIGIOUS PERSECUTION.

24. Jews on reaching their fourteenth year may be received into the orthodox church, nothwithstanding the objection of their parents. All Jews on conversion receive from the state a considerable subvention, and are thenceforth free from all disqualifications.

25. Synagogues are only allowed in places where there are no fewer than eighty Jewish houses. Jews holding divine worship in their houses without official permission are punished by law.

ALIENATED AND BLACKMAILED.

26. The Russian law declares all Jews "to be aliens whose several rights are regulated by special ordinances." This law and the mass of special ordinances cause the Jews to be regarded as a pariah caste.

27. The minute legal restrictions which hem in every action of the Jew, and compel him to obtain police sanction for everything he requires to do, renders him a ready subject for blackmail, and he can only live by bribing. The poverty of the bulk of the Jews has now reached that stage where bribery is impossible. Hence these restrictive laws are now enforced with all possible rigor.

For the further information of the House I also append to my remarks a few illustrations which have come to my knowledge of the practical working of these laws:

M. S., 37 years old, eleven years in Moscow, was a jeweler, belonging to the second guild, and paid £12 per annum for license. He was doing a good business in Moscow and surrounding districts, but received notice to quit within seven months; and having a good deal of money standing out in the country left Moscow for a few days to collect it. On his return he was ordered to leave in seven days for going out of town without leave. He was obliged to leave behind him a good deal of money outstanding, and, in broken health and fortune, was thus forced to leave his native land.

Abraham Moses, Moscow, belonging to the first guild of merchants. He carried on an extensive business, had thirteen clerks in his office, all Jews, and had to dismiss them by order of the police, and not being allowed to employ Christian employés, had to realize on his property at a great loss and leave Moscow.

Moses Meyerowski, wife, no children, tailor. He had been fourteen years in Kremchuck (Poltava), was making a comfortable living, and had four assistants. He was employed by some of the élite of the district; most of his customers, however, taking credit. In answer to his demands for money, he was ordered to leave the place in seven days without being able to collect his debts. All he got for his belongings hardly sufficed to pay half his journey expenses.

Isaac Wolvchinski, 53 years, carpenter, eighteen years at Ikallet, has a wife and seven children. A hard-working man, he could pay his way when at home, but had nothing over; was ordered to leave in three days, and in the short time left him he could not get enough to buy sufficient provisions for the journey.

Here is a letter from a citizen of Edinburgh, describing a scene which he witnessed, which tells its own story. Volumes more of similar testimony might be appended.

Here is a sample of the most recent refugees. A few evenings ago, the Hamburg steamer arrived with its usual freight of exiles. On landing they formed into little family groups, each with its bundle for the inspection of the custom-house officers, and when this was completed the relief committee proceeded with its humane work, giving to each a substantial meal, and distributing clothes and a little money to the very needy. One of the most striking groups consisted of a respectable man and his wife, apparently in good circumstances. He was a watchmaker, P. L., from Moscow, of about 55 years. With tears he told us he was in business in that city for twenty-two years, employing several men, and in a good position; but the hand of the authorities fell on him, and he was hurriedly driven forth. He was now a homeless exile, and all he had in the world was in a basket at his feet. His wife seized both hands of a lady friend who was with me, and amidst her sobs, told that she had left her five children behind her in the grave at Moscow. It was the one touch of nature which makes the whole world kin. I could not say who wept the most, the listener or the speaker. With some reluctance they partook of the charity of a cup of hot coffee. For the sympathy and the little kindness shown them, the husband took my hand and kissed it, and blessed me.

Your space will not admit of a description of the twentieth part of what I see any time at Leith—teachers, lawyers, students, manufacturers, and tradesmen, all at a sudden stroke rendered destitute, and driven out as homeless wanderers to face penury and cold in their efforts to begin life anew in a strange land. It is pitiful, above all things, to see the little children turned old with sorrow, while their parents are sunk in the silent, deep agony of despair. In the presence of such misery one asks the question, What evil thing have these people done to suffer such inhumanity? They only refuse to enter the Greek Church. The Christianity they are accustomed to is to see a rude, ignorant Russian kneeling before a wooden cross on the roadside and kissing an image, and then rising up to spit on the first Jew he meets and to curse him. Whatever the Jews may be, their ancient idolatry has been whipped out of them by ages of suffering, and rather than offend their conscience, they will become homeless and penniless wanderers on the earth. I lose sight of their poverty and poor clothing. I only see men and women of noble heroism, who, for conscience' sake will face cold and hunger and nakedness, and go out into the world to face the Atlantic and an unknown future with their children. I can not but look on these poor Jews with admiration, and loathe the fanaticism which drives them forth, and I feel it a privilege to do anything to cheer and encourage such brave and noble people.

WILLIAM PATERSON.

13 PITT STREET, EDINBURGH, November 6, 1891.

It is idle to deny or to attempt to palliate or excuse the horrible barbarity of the Russian Government, as gentlemen have attempted to do on this floor to-day. There is no question about the sentiment of the American people on this subject. Below are a few opinions of the American press which I have gathered.

The New York Herald has an article upon "Life with the Exiles," and says:

We find them to be a peaceable, prudent, patient, and painstaking people; they have all the qualifications for good citizenship, and they cultivate the soil without difficulty and without previous experience.

The New York World:

The policy of persecution which the Russian Government has adopted toward its Jewish subjects is engaging the attention of the civilized world. Whatever the motives which have prompted it, there can be no doubt about the relentless barbarity with which it is being carried out. Proofs of this are accumulating every day, and it is plainly seen that the persecution is nothing short of persecution to the death

The New York Tribune:

This Jew-baiting is a purely religious persecution. The Czar so regards it, and so do his ministers and all Russian officials. The talk about the Jews being obnoxious for social or industrial reasons is nonsense, and when put forward by the Russian Press is intended merely to bamboozle the gullible. The Jews are hated simply because they are not, and will not become, members of the Greek Church.

New York Public Opinion says:

When any Government owning the force of international obligation undertakes to reduce several millions of its subjects to a choice between starvation and flight, the country is likely to become the asylum of multitudes of men, women, and children, reduced to the condition of hunted beasts, have not only the right but the duty of vigorous protest. Owing rather to ignorance of the precise character of Russian policy in this matter than indifference to it, the people of the United States have so far failed to express the sentiments which it naturally evokes. The American press may, we think, be trusted to do its entire duty in the premises.

The San Francisco Chronicle says:

The Jews are hated simply because they are not and will not become members of the Greek Church, and everyone else who persists in remaining outside the pale of orthodoxy is hated just the same. In proof of this one has only to observe the persecution that is being directed against the Stundists, Old Believers, Lutherans, and others. In the eyes of this fanatical and bigoted Government all Protestants and Roman Catholics are accursed heretics, whom it is the duty of the orthodox believers to persecute, despoil, and destroy.

Below is the opinion of an English statesman, who most undoubtedly voices the sentiment of his countrymen.

His Grace the Duke of Argyle has addressed the following letter to a member of the London Russo-Jewish Committee:

INVERARY, ARGYLESHIRE.
September 3, 1891.

SIR: I have been in hopes that some authentic contradiction by Russian authorities might enable us at least to suspend our judgment on the terrible accusations brought against them in respect of the cruel persecution of the Jews.

No such contradiction, however, has yet appeared; and I am afraid we must accept it as a fact that one of the greatest empires in the world, calling itself not only Christian, but preëminently "Orthodox," is now acting toward the Jewish people in a spirit worthy of the darkest period of the Dark Ages.

I know of no resource except the public opinion of the Christian world. Let us all take part in crying "shame" on such conduct. It is thoroughly barbarous.

Yours obediently,

ARGYLE.

Below are opinions of the English press upon the subject under consideration.

The Yorkshire Herald says:

When President Harrison recently appealed to the Russian Government to show mercy to the Jews it was thought that reason at last had penetrated the cabinet of the Czar. It was supposed that the old policy of Russianizing the alien race would be once more adopted. These hopes, however, have been grievously disappointed. It seems almost incredible that in the present state of our civilization one of the great powers of Europe should persecute a large section of its subjects because of their religious belief. Yet the fact is so; and it is for other powers, without interference which would prove offensive, to bring such pressure to bear upon Russian authority as is likely to produce a better state of things.

The Freeman's Journal says:

There is little likelihood that the vigor of the present policy will be lessened, or that the feelings of the civilized world will no more be outraged, by a repetition of the terrible episodes that have recently earned for the Czar and his Government the reprobation of humanity.

The Scottish Leader says:

It is neither right nor possible that the voice of civilized humanity should not be uttered in condemnation of such cruelties as have been inflicted upon the Russian Jews. In spite of the indignant protestations of almost every other civilized community, the expulsion of the Jews from Russia is being continued, with attendant circumstances of cruelty and injustice that could not be paralleled in the history of modern Europe."

The Odessa correspondent of the London Daily News gives the following, and when it is known that these outrages are privately winked at by the Czar's Government the crime grows black:

I have to-day been shown a letter from Starodub, the receiver of which vouches for the integrity and trustworthiness of the writer, stating that during the recent antisemitic excesses perpetrated in that town, five young Jewish girls were outraged and otherwise so barbarously maltreated that they have all since succumbed. The writer also states that, including these five victims to the brutal lust and fanatic barbarity of the mob, the attack on the Jewish quarters has resulted in twenty deaths. The local authorities at Starodub are, as might have been expected, doing their utmost to suppress the real facts of this wanton and infamous attack on the helpless Jews. A report reached Odessa last night that an anti-Jewish riot had with difficulty been suppressed at Balta, a place which earned a disgraceful notoriety during the excesses committed in 1882. The officially described "deplorable incident" at Starodub threatens to become an example to be followed by the fanatical and brutal elements in other Jewish centers. The provincial authorities are, or should be, perfectly cognizant of the threatened danger to the lives, honor, and property of the Jewish inhabitants under their protection, and there can be no excuse or palliation whatever for these responsible officials if, with the police and military forces always at their command and disposition, they do not take instant and rigorous measures for the prompt and exemplary punishment of the primary instigator of these inhuman excesses which are covering Russia with eternal disgrace.

Now I submit, Mr. Speaker, and gentlemen of the House of Representatives, once more, whether any past friendliness of the Czar's Government to our own can atone for such crimes against God and man as I have herein but partially set forth. Once more I repeat that any government that would enter upon such a systematic persecution of its subjects has placed itself without the pale of sympathy of any civilized nation upon the face of the earth.

The record shows, I am sorry to say, that the populace of Russia to some extent at least are parties to this persecution. I am not a prophet or the son of a prophet, but I believe there is a just God that rules on high and governs the affairs of men, and a cry of wrong and distress, unheard by mortal ear, may be heard in heaven; and as He sent plagues to the ancient Egyptians to punish them for their sins against his people, so He may send famine to the people of Russia for the same cause. It is no wonder that the royal family travel in secret and look under every seat for a dynamite bomb.

Mr. Speaker, I am not an Israelite or a Jew. I believe, as the Jews do not, that the Messiah, the Immanuel, the Prince of Peace came in the person of the lowly Nazerine, who walked beneath the palm trees of Judea eighteen centuries ago; that he died on the cross for you and me, Mr. Speaker; that he has been "wounded for our transgressions and bruised for our iniquities;" that he was "brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep dumb before her shearer, so he opened not his mouth." But I believe that with all their faults the children of Israel are still the chosen people of God, and finally, when He who sits upon his people "as a refiner and purifier of silver," when the dross is removed, and the Almighty's discipline of centuries shall be fulfilled, the children of Israel will be restored to his favor.

I seem to hear the voice of the Hebrew prophet saying to his chosen people, "For a small moment have I forsaken thee, but in great mercies will I gather thee. In a little wrath I hid my face from thee for a moment; but with everlasting kindness will I have mercy upon thee, saith the Lord thy Redeemer."

Under the call of States on yesterday, I introduced resolutions expressing the sentiment of our people in regard to this persecution, unequaled, I believe, since the children of Israel groaned beneath the taskmaster of Pharaoh in Egypt; unequaled since Moses cried to God in their behalf and the Almighty answered "I have heard their groanings and have come down to deliver." If our people are not moved, Mr. Speaker, upon this subject, what means it that the President of the United States thought it of sufficient consequence to call the attention of Congress to this cruel and relentless persecution, and to advise the representatives of the people that, moved by dictates of humanity, he had offered his good offices to the Czar's Government to secure amelioration and surcease of the same.

What means it that numerous Representatives besides myself, from remote sections of the country, yesterday, under the call of States, offered resolutions upon this subject? Then, once more, the United States has a selfish and pecuniary interest to stop this persecution. If these 5,000,000 subjects of the Russian Government are to be driven from their homes, are compelled to sacrifice their belongings, they must go to some other country, and already the advance army of these people is being landed on these shores, houseless, homeless, friendless, without trade or occupation in this country whereby they may earn their bread, and at present and for a long time dependent upon the charity of our people. I shall vote for this bill with or without my amendment, because I believe that the mass of the peasantry of Russia can not, do not sanction or approve the acts of the Czar's Government which I have described towards the Israelites or Jews. I venture to close these remarks by appending to the same a copy of a preamble and resolution which I offered in the House on yesterday, and which was referred by you, Mr. Speaker, to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, as follows (and I trust that this important matter will receive the early consideration of that committee):

Whereas it has come to the knowledge of our people that 5,000,000 subjects of the Czar of all the Russias, known as Israelites or Jews, are at present subject to the most cruel and relentless persecution, banished from their homes on the most trivial pretext, without opportunity to sell their belongings, thus often driven into exile into strange lands destitute and penniless; and

Whereas the exodus of so large a people is impossible and impracticable:

Resolved, That the Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, recognizing the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, desire to express our sympathy for these unfortunate people in this hour of their dire distress.

Resolved, While it is against the policy of this Government to interfere in the affairs of other nations, yet, in view of the appalling facts recited above, and considering the friendly relations that have always existed between the Czar's Government and our own, we ask the President of the United States to continue to use his friendly and good offices to secure from the Czar's Government an amelioration of the condition and a surcease of persecution of these unfortunate people, and that the honorable Secretary of State be requested to forward to our minister at St. Petersburg, and through him to His Majesty's Government, a copy of these resolutions.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I certainly hope that this House will reject the amendment to strike out the appropriation of $100,000, offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. In 1848, when our Government was comparatively feeble and poor, we joyfully commissioned the Navy to carry bread to the people of Ireland. Mr. BOUTELLE, former chairman of the Naval Committee, tells us that the modern war vessels now owned by the Government are not suitable for such a purpose. And to refuse the necessary appropriation to carry these supplies to the starving people of Russia—Jews and Gentiles—while it may be in harmony with Democratic "retrenchment and reform," yet it is an act of niggardly parsimony that the Government of the United States of America can not afford to make. To adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is to emasculate and destroy the bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LIND. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. LIND. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the pending amendment.

Mr. LIND. I will ask the gentleman who made it to withdraw it, and then I will renew it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By unanimous consent it will be considered as withdrawn, and as renewed by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LIND].

Mr. LIND. I desire to say just one word, and that is this: If gentlemen would stop a moment to consider, they would see the absurdity of undertaking to attach a condition to a gift from the people of my State and other Northwestern States. My little town alone, of only 4,000 inhabitants, contributed 10 tons of flour. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] has offered an amendment which is not only an insult to the Russian Government, but to our own people. Our own people say that out of our sufficiency, out of our abundance, we are willing that the starving Russians should be fed. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] proceeds on the theory that I have often heard, from him and from other gentlemen from his section, that it is always in season to preach to a man to reform.

Our idea is different: it is that when a man is hungry and starving we want to feed him and let that act of humanity do the preaching, and the reformation will come in the course of time. I simply want to emphasize what has been so well expressed by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], that no gentleman would send a gift to another and have the express charges on it collected on delivery.

Mr. FORNEY. Sent C. O. D.

Mr. LIND. If the American people and if this Congress are not of the opinion that our Treasury is in a condition to justify it, if we do not feel that our nation is able to stand the expense of forwarding this flour, for God's sake do not do it. I believe that there is enough generosity in the people of the Northwest who contributed this flour and this corn to send it over, if the great American people are not able to do it in their capacity as a nation.

We have contributed the flour, and can send it over without begging you to do so, and we certainly should consider it an insult to us to have any objection of the character suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts attached to it. [Cries of "Bravo!" and applause.]

Mr. COOLIDGE. So far as this matter is concerned, as a Representative from Massachusetts I know no distinction in race, of Jew or Greek, or bond or free. I only know that where human suffering exists it should be relieved as soon as known. I do not ask any gentleman on this floor, I do not ask any constituent of mine to exercise more charity in a matter like this than I would exercise myself; and that the McKinley bill, as has been stated here, has caused great suffering I do not doubt, but what good that does to the suffering Jew of Russia I fail to see.

Then, again, as to the transportation of this gift to the suffering people of Russia, let me say that I would hardly consider it an advantage for a gift to be sent by express, the charges on which were more than the value of the gift itself. I am certainly in favor of this resolution as it came from the Senate without any amendment whatever.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment is rejected, and the question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, some misunderstanding may arise as to the words proposed to be stricken out. I therefore ask that the amendment be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana will be again reported.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I ask further that the measure as it would be, in the event the amendment be adopted, be reported.

The resolution as it would read when amended was again reported.

Mr. KILGORE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire further about that amendment of the gentleman from Indiana. If it be adopted and if the resolution should pass and become the law of the land, would it not become incumbent on Congress, and is it not his understanding of it that, as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, he would have to report an appropriation on some appropriation bill to carry out the purposes of this resolution? Now, that is the effect of it, and if the gentlemen from Indiana——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Will the gentleman allow me to add a piece to his interrogatory? What is the constitutional difference between paying money out of the public Treasury to charter a vessel and paying it to send a vessel of the Navy?

Mr. KILGORE. Now, one moment more. I say, if the gentleman from Indiana will substitute some words in there and say that Congress shall not make any appropriation for the purposes included in this resolution, then it will be complete, and will serve the purposes this House understands is intended by that resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I trust I will be indulged a moment. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] takes a very extraordinary view of this matter—very extraordinary. Here are two propositions before the House. One is to employ the vessels of the Navy in shipping to Russia the gifts of our people to the starving people of that country. That is one proposition. That proposition is to remain as it is in the bill if the amendment is adopted. I, for one, am distinctly in favor of that. It is the best use you can put your Navy to.

Mr. KILGORE. Under your amendment?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

The other proposition is to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to charter vessels in addition to using, or without using, any naval vessels, to the extent of $100,000 for transporting these contributions of our people to the famishing people of Russia.

Now, if the latter proposition be stricken out, it leaves the matter exactly as in a former instance in our history; for we have a precedent for the employment of our Navy in the noble work of humanity and charity, a precedent already mentioned. It is a very proper purpose in which to employ the Navy. I say further, there is no excuse for appropriating this $100,000 or any other sum. I hope we will all agree that the Navy shall be employed in this work of humanity. It can be done by the vessels of the Navy of the United States. It requires no statement of experts or official reports to prove this.

Mr. KILGORE. Without any additional appropriation?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I beg the gentleman's pardon at that point. He is mistaken.

Mr. HOLMAN. I feel sure that if the House will strike out this $100,000 that will be the end of that.

Mr. KILGORE. That will be the end of the $100,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. That will be the end of any appropriation unless it be put back in a conference between the two Houses. What expense can be incurred if you strike out the $100,000? The cost of your Navy is the same whether the ships are employed or not, if they are in commission.

Mr. KILGORE. I understand the purpose of the amendment, and that is, it is in the interest of economy and to get rid of that $100,000 appropriation.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. KILGORE. Now, sir, we can not anticipate what will be done by a conference committee; but I am sure that a conference committee would try to put this $100,000 back; but I can not understand how this expense that will be incurred under this bill to transport these provisions can be met unless there is an appropriation made either on this or some other bill.

Mr. BLOUNT and Mr. BOUTELLE addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate on the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to support the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana for reasons which I desire to state.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate on the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to strike out the last word. Always, heretofore, Mr. Speaker, in the consideration of propositions of this sort they have come into the House of Representatives after examination by a committee. In this case there has been no such examination by the Senate, and none by the House. I was eager that this joint resolution should be referred to a committee of this House, with the right to report at any time, because there are some questions connected with it that are in dispute. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], long a member of this House, has made the declaration that there are sufficient transports belonging to the Navy of the United States to convey these supplies.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE], who, during the last Congress, was chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and who has been for several years a member of that committee, declares that the vessels of the Navy are not adapted to any such purpose.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him briefly?

Mr. BLOUNT. There is so much brevity in this five-minute discussion that I fear I shall not have time to say all I want to say.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Well, as the gentleman was quoting from me, I thought he might permit me to make a remark.

Mr. BLOUNT. Well, I withdraw the quotation. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is a dispute in relation to this fact, and of course the House is entitled to have full information upon the subject. The House has had no communication with the Navy Department about this matter; it has resorted to no means of information as to whether or not the naval vessels can supply the amount of transportation that is required. As I have already stated, in 1847, when relief was to be furnished to the suffering Irish and Scotch people, the Congress of the United States provided that naval vessels of the United States, designating a certain number, might be used for the purpose of transportation. That was during the period of our war with Mexico, when there was a great demand upon our naval resources, but that resolution was adopted and the transportation was effected. Again in 1880 a similar joint resolution was offered in the Senate and was reported back with a provision allowing vessels to be chartered; that was done without reason stated, without debate, without any question being raised as to whether or not the Government had vessels of its own which would answer the purpose.

Now, anxious as I am to have these supplies sent, I am perfectly willing to pause for a moment, in accord with gentlemen who are making suggestions here of economy in the public expenditures, to inquire into the question whether it is necessary to go beyond permitting the use of our own naval vessels and appropriate money to charter others. There is a reasonable desire on the part of the House to have full and accurate information upon that question. Let this amendment be agreed to, and the joint resolution goes back to the Senate of the United States, and opportunity, time, the situation, will furnish us additional information upon this subject.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE], or some other gentleman, has indicated that it is uncertain what a conference committee may do. Sir, we are safe in that regard. When the Senate, if it shall not see fit to concur in this amendment, returns the joint resolution to the House of Representatives, it will be for the House to say whether it will recede from its amendment, or whether it will consent to any committee of conference or not. The whole subject will be in our power then, as it is to-day, and I trust that the amendment will be agreed to and that we shall now dispose of this matter.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words. It seems desirable that the House should not act upon a resolution of this kind under a misconception. Many of the new members would naturally be likely to place a great deal of dependence upon the positive statement made by so experienced a legislator as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. HOLMAN] that the Navy Department is amply supplied with transports to perform this work. Nevertheless, sir, the fact is that the Navy of the United States has no transports whatever.

The United States Government does not own a transport ship. There is also a great misapprehension in the minds of many people in regard to the services that a naval vessel can properly perform. Gentlemen will remember the old story of a Secretary of the Navy from an interior State who was said to have expressed great astonishment when he looked down the main hatch of a ship of war and discovered that "the durned thing was hollow." [Laughter.] A modern naval vessel, however, is hollow only to a very limited extent, and the fact is, as everybody knows who has ever inspected the interior of one of our modern war ships, that the problem is not to find something to load them with, but to find room in them for their crews, provisions, mechanical appliances, and the necessary munitions of war. Now, so far as our modern war ships are concerned it is utterly frivolous to talk of using them to carry cargoes of wheat or flour to Russia or anywhere else.

I suppose my venerable and honored friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] may have been misled by the fact that naval ships have been used for such purposes as the conveyance of the remains of Ericsson to Sweden, etc., but you can not carry cargoes of freight on board of these modern naval vessels. Among the old vessels of the Navy there is, so far as I know, only one that would be available for this purpose at all, and that is the old frigate Constellation. She is now laid up at Annapolis as a school ship or training ship on which the cadets go out on their annual cruise. She could carry, I understand, only about 6,000 barrels of flour. She is a sailing vessel, and how long it would take her to reach Russia, after fighting the storms of midwinter under sail on the Atlantic, I should not wish to prophesy. But I do know that in order to send that portion of these provisions upon the Constellation it would be necessary to put her in proper condition, to fit her out thoroughly for an ocean voyage, to man her with a full crew of officers and men; and my impression is that by the time we had balanced the books we should find that this attempt at economy had "petered out" to a very small point.

That is the situation; and I simply want the House to understand it. I have no particular personal or political interest in this resolution, except as it appeals to me as an American citizen. I want the House to understand, as a matter due to its own dignity, that if it adopts this amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to assume the responsibility for transporting these provisions and then cuts off from the resolution all authority for him to secure suitable vessels in which to transport the goods, it places upon him the duty of putting these tons upon tons of provisions on board of ships of war, when the House ought to know, and I trust now, accepting my word for it, does know, that he has no steam war vessels that can perform that service. It seems to me that would be very remarkable and very frivolous legislation.

Further, as a member of this body I do not think that upon a measure of this kind, involving considerations broader than State lines, broader than our own country, as broad as humanity itself—I do not think the House of Representatives ought so far to abdicate the functions it ought to exercise as the popular exponent of the sentiments of the American people—their sentiments of honor, their sentiments of national pride, their sentiments of liberality and generosity, as to feel compelled to send back this resolution, simple as it is in its character, to be again indorsed by the Senate of the United States, before we rise to the dignity of our duty and of the occasion.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, during this discussion there have been made several suggestions in which I thoroughly concur. One of those is that we should not send a gift to anybody under such conditions that the express charges will eat it all up before it gets to its destination. Another is that when we know of persons who are hungry, our first duty is, as our first impulse should be, to feed them. And if I may suggest an additional consideration, it seems to me equally important that we should endeavor to feed them before they die. I do not believe that the resolution before the House is calculated to effect that, in my mind, benevolent end. As I understand it, the situation is about this: The famine in Russia occurs in inland wheat-raising districts, very far from the seaboard. The reason in great part of that famine, and the reason in most part for its bitterness and continuance, is the fact of the utterly inadequate, I might almost say utterly lacking, facilities for transportation in those districts and from other districts to them. There is no actual stripping of that country of grain. There is grain there now; but on account of the lack of facilities for communication that grain is very high in price—so high that the poor peasantry whose crops have failed can not get the money to buy it and therefore must starve unless food be given them.

Not merely is there grain in these districts, but there is no famine in Austria-Hungary; there is no famine in Asia Minor; there is no famine in a great many of the districts of Russia which are comparatively near the famine-stricken regions. Now, to attempt to take these provisions contributed by our people and to transmit them for use in the famine-stricken districts of Russia, means this: It means in the first place that as the Baltic ports are now closed, we must transport these provisions to the ports on the Black Sea, with a delay of at least a month, and more, probably six weeks. It means that after these provisions arrive at those ports they must not merely be distributed by government agency, with all that that implies, but must be distributed under conditions which involve a transportation as appallingly expensive as would have been that from Omaha to San Francisco before we had the Pacific Railroad. It means that practically six months must elapse in a great many cases before even the remnant of provisions that would reach the famine-stricken regions could be utilized for the benefit of the people there.

Now, if there is anything to be done for those starving people it can be done in this way, and I respectfully submit in no other way—by selling the contributions of our people, turning them into cash, and cabling the proceeds, if necessary to-morrow, to trustworthy sources of distribution upon the spot—to such agencies, for instance, as the Red Cross Association. In this way the famine-stricken people of Russia could be the immediate recipients of our bounty and the sharers in the salvation we hold out to them.

I am not in favor of indiscriminate charity. I am not in favor of stretcthing the prerogatives of Government in order to give vent to our charitable feelings. But even that consideration would not have stood in the way of my support of this resolution. I believe my constituency would not simply have pardoned me, but would have lauded me for supporting a proposition in the form I have indicated. But they, sir, the very ones who understand this matter thoroughly, would pardon me least of all, and I tell you the charity of the world will pardon you least of all, for failing to adopt the means and the only means to give instant relief to these suffering people, and supporting instead a measure whereby, after the offerings of our beneficence are landed in Russia there will be required more than they are worth to transport them to where they are to be used, necessitating that the relief shall arrive only after the green grain of the new year shall be growing over the graves of the poor creatures who have died from famine. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HERBERT. I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of addressing myself briefly to the effect of this amendment if it shall be adopted. If the amendment is carried, the effect of the resolution as amended, it seems to me, would be simply this: That the Secretary of the Navy would be authorized to use any vessel—that is the language of the resolution—which is suitable and proper for the transportation of these provisions. As I understand it, he has communicated to the Senate the fact that the Constellation is the only vessel now at his command suitable for this purpose. The Constellation is an old-fashioned sailing ship and has a freight capacity of about 6,000 barrels of flour.

Now, there is no other vessel, as the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] has said, in the Navy fit for this purpose. Our modern war ships are unfitted for commercial purposes because of the method and manner of their construction. All of them have horizontal engines below the water line, extending more or less from stem to stern, and all are cut up into compartments of various kinds, coal bunkers, which would not hold freight because they are only accessible through manholes, and quarters for men. The vessels also carry immense armaments, much heavier guns than the old ones. For these reasons, and because the hold of the vessels would be always heated to such a degree as to injure, if not destroy, the flour which has been donated, neither of them would be fit for the transportation of such supplies.

The effect, therefore, of the passage of the amendment would be that the Secretary of the Navy would feel himself empowered to use that vessel, the Constellation, which he has heretofore notified the Senate was fit for that purpose, and to that extent I am willing to vote for the resolution. It would show the sympathy of the United States with the suffering poor of Europe, while it would be practically no increase of expenditures, or very little, if any, for the reason that the crew to be employed must be men already enlisted. As I understand it, the Secretary has already enlisted the full number of men authorized by law, so that the crew detailed to go in this ship are already in the employ of the Government, and if there be any increase because of sending this ship abroad, it would simply be that coal would be required to make the voyage, which possibly would not otherwise be consumed. That is the whole of it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of the resolution, provided that we first adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana. The simple question before us in the consideration of that amendment is whether we shall undertake to perform a duty which, in my opinion, is primarily the duty of the Russian Government, of transporting these provisions across the ocean for the benefit of the Russian poor. Russia has an immense amount of money provided and carefully kept for the purposes of war. Why, if her people are poor and suffering, can she not use some of that money, I am unable to see. I wish, also, to call attention to another point.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HERBERT. I should like to have just two minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from Alabama will be permitted to proceed for two minutes longer.

There was no objection.

Mr. HERBERT. I desire simply to call the attention of the House specially to the facts stated by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], a member of the Committee on Appropriations, who has made a study of this question, and what he has stated was not controverted on this floor. The sum and substance of it is that instead of there being an abundance of money in our Treasury, as the gentleman from Kentucky said in his speech, we are confronted with the fact that there is to-day, if all of the expenditures of the Government were paid up to date, a Treasury deficiency. Now, in that condition of affairs is the Democratic party here on this floor, that came into power on the promise of retrenchment, economy, and reform, prepared, as its first step, with that deficiency staring them in the face, to vote away $100,000 of the people's money in this charitable—I may say this extravagant—generosity towards the people of a Government amply able of itself to perform that duty? That is the proposition presented by the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, which I hope will receive the approval of the House.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

So far as the cry of a deficiency in the Treasury is concerned, which has just been raised by the gentleman from Alabama and other gentlemen on the floor to-day, I am not particularly frightened, for I have heard it on the floor of the House so many times during the last eight years that I have been in Congress, by gentlemen who wanted to beat one proposition or another, that it has become like the cry of the boy who shouted "Wolf!" "Wolf!" so many times that at last nobody would believe him at all.

Now, what condition, according to the gentleman's own statement, is the Government to be left in if this proposition of the gentleman from Indiana shall prevail? Why, we are told that the naval vessels are not fit to transport these provisions. I have no doubt that is true. I believe it to be true. And we are also told that there is only one vessel, the Constellation, an old sailing ship, available for such a purpose. She would get to Russia after she leaves here, the Lord only knows when; but most likely after the starving people are all dead and gone, or, as somebody on the other side has just said, when the green crops may be growing over their graves. That is the only vessel available. When it will get there, after it starts, no man can prophesy. She can carry about 12,000 barrels of flour.

Now, the gentleman wants this great Government, as he says, to show its sympathy for the starving and suffering poor of Russia by sending in that vessel only a small part of the flour and grain which has been so generously contributed by the people of the Northwest, and let the rest remain here, unless somebody else, by private contributions, will undertake to send it across. I submit, sir, that such a proposition is worse than doing nothing at all. The people of the great Northwest, representing, as I believe they have done, the great heart of their own countrymen in their generosity, have come forward and answered the demands of suffering humanity across the ocean in a Government that has been friendly to us always and at all times. They have not only brought out of their granaries and storehouses a large part of the fruits of their labor and contributed to this noble purpose, but have also provided the means to transport their donations across one-half of the continent to the edge of the sea. They have no vessels to carry it across the ocean, and the Government is simply asked now to provide transportation to take it to its destination on the shores of Russia where the suffering exists.

Now, sir, let us do it or let us say that we will not do it. Let us not present a gift in a halfway manner. Let us not do it in a way which will show our meanness a thousand times more than as if we did not purpose to do it at all. The gentleman's own statement is that if the amendment is adopted these supplies will not be transported, only a part of them, and those only in an old sailing vessel that, as I said before, will get there the Lord only knows when. Let us pass the resolution and provide the means of transporting these supplies or let us say we will not do it at all. Why, suppose the Secretary of the Navy should come to the conclusion that under this resolution, with the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, it was his duty to send those supplies across in the naval vessels. Of course they can carry a little. Suppose he furnishes a fleet large enough to carry all these supplies across. Does not the question then arise whether it will not cost this Government much more to send such a fleet of naval vessels as would take all these supplies across than to pay for transports to take them?

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I offer, as an apology for my adding anything to the debate that has already gone on so long, the statement that I shall favor the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], not because I have faith that it contains much in the way of economy, but for the very excellent reason given by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, when he said that thus sending it to a conference committee would give some time for examination, and I think he might have added very properly that such course would give the time and opportunity necessary to ascertain the facts in the case.

I am told by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE], the ex-chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and doubtless very correctly, if he is not misinformed, that there is now no vessel in the United States Navy, except perhaps the Constellation, that is fit for this transportation; while my distinguished friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], with a length of service here so long that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, informs me with absolute positiveness that we have no less than twenty-two vessels or transports fit for this service. I do not know which of these distinguished gentlemen is in error as to his information. I know they are both usually correct in their statements of fact.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I should yield to the gentleman from Indiana on that point.

Mr. HEARD. Then my friend from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE], as well as my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], must concede that there are some reasons why we should have the means of ascertaining which of these statements is the correct one.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would like my friend to permit me to say that my statements on the subject were in quite general terms. I have insisted that these war ships could transport these supplies.

Mr. HEARD. You said there were twenty-two such vessels.

Mr. HOLMAN. My statement on the subject was in quite general terms. I believe that any of the seagoing war ships can transport supplies. I did not have occasion while on the floor of the House, I think, to mention the number, but I entertain no doubt of the fact that upon inquiry being made it will be found that out of this great mass of vessels we have now, the largest navy we have ever had in time of peace in our history, it will be found that there are ample vessels to transport these barrels and bags of provisions.

I concede that a great many of these vessels are so constructed that they will not carry full cargoes, and I am aware of the fact that the naval officers do not want to be bothered with the transportation of these supplies or with this kind of work. There is nothing war like about it; but your war vessels can transport these provisions to Russia, and will do it if Congress shall order it to be done.

Mr. HEARD. Now, Mr. Speaker, just a moment further. As to the question of economy, the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] admits, in reply to the interrogatory put to him by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE], that if this amendment is adopted it shuts the door to the specific appropriation of the $100,000 contemplated by the original resolution, but that it does not, of course, and can not provide against the necessity for making whatever appropriation is necessary, or may become necessary, from the Treasury to meet whatever expenditures it may be the duty of the Secretary of the Navy to make to carry into effect this resolution. It occurs to me, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that it is a question first as to whether it will be more expensive to send over the vessels we have or charter others, and whether the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has not the effect of removing a limitation upon an appropriation, instead of shutting the door to an appropriation which he admits may become necessary.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why, no, I did not admit any such thing. I stated exactly the contrary, that there is no power to expend a dollar.

Mr. HEARD. I beg the gentleman's pardon if I have misunderstood him. I understood him to say, and I think the notes of the stenographer will bear me out, that an appropriation would have to be made for the expenses of the Navy Department, and if a part of that money is appropriated to this purpose of course it is part of a general appropriation made.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend misapprehends me entirely, because these men are already in the employment of the Government.

Mr. HEARD. I understand that, and that they will have to be subsisted and paid by the Government.

Mr. HOLMAN. They would be paid anyhow. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted. If there be no objection the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, before that is taken I desire to move the previous question upon all the amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the previous question. Does the gentleman move the previous question upon the resolution and all amendments, or does the gentleman's motion embrace only the amendments?

Mr. BLOUNT. If the Chair will put the motion so as to cover the amendments, I think the House is prepared to take action on the question.

The question being taken, the previous question was ordered on the amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to strike out.

The question being taken, the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BOUTELLE and others demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 133, noes 60.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Yeas and nays. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is considering the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BOUTELLE. What Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BOUTELLE. We have no rules authorizing anything of that kind.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By unaminous consent of the House, which is a rule, the House went into the consideration of this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole, it being well known that by the usages of this body there is no yea-and-nay vote in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Then the Chair holds that when the House is in Committee of the Whole, under general parliamentary law, the yeas and nays can not be demanded?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair holds this, that the House itself has consented to that method of business.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I understood a moment ago that the Chair entertained a motion for the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did, and that has been customary.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Was that in order.

Mr. SPEAKER pro tempore. That was in order?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Under parliamentary law?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOUTELLE. In Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not in Committee of the Whole, but when the House is considering a bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. It is one of the advantages in considering a measure in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I submit, for the decision of the Chair in his wisdom, whether, if it is competent to make a motion for the adoption of the previous question in this stage of procedure, is it not equally in order for me to call for the yeas and nays?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Maine when the House——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Will the Speaker allow me to make a suggestion?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. With pleasure.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. In a former case, decided by Speaker CARLISLE, when we had rules, of course, it was decided that this was an anomalous course, for which there were no rules, and therefore he would have to assimilate the proceedings, as far as possible, to the rules; and that a motion for the previous question was in order, because there was a right in the House to limit debate, and that that was only a mode of limiting debate; but he has never decided, and the Speaker will ascertain that on examination, that the yeas and nays could not be called, because that would be to decide that the Constitution was overridden——

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman anticipates the point that I was about to make.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. It is a constitutional provision that the yeas and nays shall be called whenever demanded by a sufficient number on any proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will look into the matter, but remembers no circumstance under which they have been ordered.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I was about to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the right to call for the yeas and nays is a constitutional one and can not be abrogated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is in the House. There is no question but that the gentleman is correct in that statement.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I insist on my motion for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BLOUNT. Has the Chair decided that the demand for the yeas and nays is not in order?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I think the Chair is considering his decision now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will look to it in a moment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. The consent of the House to consider a matter as if we were in the Committee of the Whole is consenting to liberalize the rules and not to straighten them. It is to increase the flexibility of the rules and not an impairment of the rules of the House; and therefore to hold that anything that can be done in the House, if we were in the House, could not be done if we were considering it in the House as in Committee of the Whole would be to hold exactly contrary; and therefore I suggest that it would not invalidate a call for the yeas and nays under the constitutional provision.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Maine will not insist on his demand for the yeas and nays. It is quite evident that those of us who, like him, are in favor of this motion, are in the minority.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I understand the Chair is looking up the question. I think, as was well suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky the other day, we ought to start right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will now state that he had not heretofore looked into the question; and the Chair was for a moment in doubt, but on reflection is satisfied the right to demand the yeas and nays exists, and so holds unhesitatingly. [Applause.] The gentleman from Maine demands the yeas and nays, the Chair having announced that the ayes had it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 165, nays 72, not voting 94; as follows:

So the amendment of Mr. HOLMAN was adopted.

The following-named members were announced as paired until further notice:

Mr. ALDERSON with Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee.

Mr. FITHIAN with Mr. WRIGHT.

Mr. LAYTON with Mr. REYBURN.

The following were announced as paired for this day:

Mr. HARTER with Mr. HOPKINS of Pennsylvania.

Mr. MILLS with Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa.

Mr. HOOKER with Mr. BELKNAP.

Mr. PATTISON of Ohio with Mr. BELDEN.

Mr. ALLEN with Mr. BERGEN.

Mr. HATCH with Mr. RIFE.

Mr. GORMAN with Mr. HOUK of Tennessee.

Mr. WILSON of Maryland with Mr. ROBINSON of Pennsylvania.

Mr. TARSNEY with Mr. RANDALL.

Mr. NORTON with Mr. PAYNE.

Mr. DONOVAN with Mr. E. B. TAYLOR.

Mr. CRAIN with Mr. V. A. TAYLOR.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio and Mr. MCKINNEY were announced as paired on this question.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. TARSNEY, is detained from the House by illness, and also that my colleague, Mr. BLAND, is kept from the Capitol by sickness in his family.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. I wish to state, Mr. Speaker, that my colleagues Mr. BOND and Mr. COWLES are detained at home by sickness.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I move the third reading of the joint resolution.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. My inquiry is whether, under our present condition as to rules, it would be in order to move to lay this joint resolution, which has now been emasculated, upon the table?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The equivalent motion of that is the one which is usually applied to Senate bills, the motion to postpone indefinitely. It has the same effect.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Then, is it in order at this time to move to postpone indefinitely?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. It is perfectly clear, Mr. Speaker, that we have not the ships for this purpose, and therefore the joint resolution in its present form is useless, so I move to postpone it indefinitely.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky, and the Speaker pro tempore declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 83, noes 65.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask for tellers.

Mr. DICKERSON. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused, only 14 members voting in favor thereof.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the demand for tellers insisted upon?

Mr. BLOUNT. It is; but I wish first to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the House shall postpone this joint resolution indefinitely will not that be the end of the matter?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That will be the effect.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 93, noes 87.

So the motion of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky was agreed to, and the joint resolution was indefinitely postponed.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The call of the House at the adjournment yesterday was with the State of Ohio.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the gentleman to withhold that motion for a moment while I make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPRINGER. My inquiry is this: Will the call be continued to-morrow as if it had gone on to-day?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that it would not be amiss to have a unanimous agreement extending the operation of the rule adopted yesterday to the session of to-morrow, because it is not certain that the terms of the rule would otherwise be sufficient to cover the case.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I ask unanimous consent that the call be continued for the introduction of bills to-morrow under the rule heretofore adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] asks unanimous consent that to-morrow the call of the States for the introduction of bills shall be continued under the rule adopted yesterday.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. With the further understanding that gentlemen who have been absent heretofore may be called at the end.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That will be understood as a part of the rule.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HATCH, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. WRIGHT, for two weeks, on account of sickness.

To Mr. NORTON, indefinitely, on account of important business.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. EDMUNDS, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Charles G. Eddy, filed in the Forty-seventh Congress.

The motion of Mr. CAMPBELL was then agreed to; and the House accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 36 minutes p. m.) adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and resolutions were laid on the Clerk's desk, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ANDREW (by request): Remonstrance of the Evangelical Alliance of Roxbury, Boston, Mass., against opening the Columbian Exhibition on the Lord's Day—to the Select Committee on the Columbian Exposition.

Also, petition of Lawrence Rotch and others, praying that the metric system of weights and measures be used exclusively in the customs service of the United States—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Also, petition of Francis A. Walker and 27 other citizens of Boston, Mass., for the same purpose—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 7, 1892.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SENATOR FROM NEW YORK.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. President, David B. Hill, a Senator elect from the State of New York, whose credentials have heretofore been presented, is now present and ready to take the oath of office.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator elect from New York will please come forward and receive the oath of office.

Mr. DOLPH. I present sundry petitions signed by citizens of Washington, and also of Oregon, I think—one of them indorsed by Mohawk Grange, No. 147, of the Patrons of Husbandry, of the State of Oregon—the signers being settlers who have located upon and improved lands in the odd-numbered sections of public lands within the limits of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company's general route from Wallula to Portland, Oregon. The petitioners allege that said limits included the odd-numbered sections for 40 miles on each side of the line of the road up to terminal limits running to Portland, Oregon, at right angles to the general course of the road for the last 25 miles; that no part of the line between Wallula and Portland has ever been constructed, and that all of the odd sections within these limits were, by the true intent of the act of September 29, 1890, forfeited to the public domain. They further allege that they are now, notwithstanding this forfeiture, denied the right to enter their respective claims, although they went upon and improved them as bona fide settlers in good faith, and maintained settlements which no withdrawal made or maintained after 1879 could of right defeat, etc., and pray that Congress will pass an act construing the forfeiture act according to its original and true purpose, to forfeit all the lands within the 40-mile boundaries and between the terminal limits drawn at right angles with the general course of the unconstructed road for 25 miles next to such terminals; and for the benefit of these and other settlers under like hardships they ask that an act be passed resuming and restoring to the public domain all lands opposite to and coterminous with those portions of any railroad line not constructed within the time or according to the terms of the law under which they are claimed.

I move that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Public Lands for consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

I present a petition, I presume the counterpart of the one just presented by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH], attested by the secretary of the National Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, addressed to the Senate of the United States, signed by H. Taylor, and 100 other persons, members of Mill Creek Grange, No. 91, Patrons of Husbandry, of Oregon, and praying for certain legislation for the relief of settlers who have located on and improved lands in the odd-numbered sections of public lands within the limits of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company's general route from Wallula to Portland, Oregon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection the resignations named will be accepted, and the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] will be appointed to the places thus made vacant.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask to be excused from service upon the Select Committee on Relations with Canada, with a view of having the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT] appointed in my place.

MARITIME CANAL OF NICARAGUA.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to call up the resolution that I offered yesterday in regard to instructing the Committee on Foreign Relations to inquire into the condition of the Maritime Canal of Nicaragua, and the Senator from Washington [Mr. ALLEN] wishes to occupy the floor upon the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. MORGAN, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be, and is hereby, directed to inquire into the progress that has been made in the work upon the Maritime Canal of Nicaragua, and what are the present conditions and prospects of that enterprise, including in their inquiry any additional explorations or surveys of the canal that have been made since the last report of that committee; and what stocks, if any, have been disposed of, or bonds issued by, the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, chartered and organized under the act of Congress approved February 20, 1889; and, for these purposes, said committee shall have authority to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths, or authorize a subcommittee to administer oaths, to persons examined. Said committee is directed to consider and report what, in their opinion, the interests of the United States may require in respect of that interoceanic communication.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. VEST. I offer an amendment to the pending resolution, which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 11, after the words "eighteen hundred and eighty-nine," insert:

And what amount of money has been actually expended for any purpose, and what contracts for construction or other objects have been made by said company.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment moved by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. MORGAN. That amendment is entirely in line with the provision of the act of Congress chartering the Maritime Canal Company, and with the permission of the Senate I will accept it and incorporate it in the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be agreed to if there be no objection. The Chair hears no objection, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, at a meeting of the Puget Sound Lumber Manufacturing Association of Washington, held at Seattle, November 17, 1891, after the recitation of premises that logically led up to it, the following resolution was adopted:

Be it resolved by this convention of delegates, representing all the business interests of the State of Washington, That our Representatives at Washington be invited and urged to take such action as will hasten the completion of the Nicaragua Canal, and if in their judgment such action becomes necessary, to use all honorable efforts to hasten the action of Congress toward loaning such credit of the Government of the United States as will insure the speedy completion of this grandest of all works ever contemplated by the civilized world.

In obedience to these expressed wishes and instructions of many of my constituents I avail myself of the earliest opportunity to give utterance to their profound interest in this measure and their solicitude for its speedy success.

I should cheerfully perform the duty because it is their will. I do so with alacrity and pleasure, because I entertain the same opinions, which I have reached through the experience and observations that have taught them.

While the results flowing from this enterprise are beneficial to the commerce of all nations, they will in a special manner stimulate and promote that of our own country, and no part of our country more vitally than the Pacific Slope, and no part of the coast more directly and happily than the State of Washington.

From the days of Christopher Columbus until the western continent had been thoroughly explored it was the dream of navigators, as well as their belief, that some passageway would be found directly connecting the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. Even as late as 1592, the voyager Juan De Fuca, when first sailing up the magnificent passageway bearing his name that leads from the Pacific Ocean into Puget Sound, thought he had found this much-sought channel.

Where the navigator abandoned the search the surveyor took it up. Modern engineering has demonstrated the practicability of such a water way.

Between the ports of Brito, on the Pacific coast, and Greytown, on the Atlantic, the distance is but 169 miles, the highest water level 102 feet. Of this transit Lake Nicaragua, with its generous breadth and depth, furnishes 56 miles. The San Juan River, discharging from it into the Atlantic Ocean, 63 miles more; while of the remaining distance, valleys with high rims are so converted into basins that of the entire length of this connecting channel there will be but 8 to 10 miles so contracted as to seriously impede the speed of vessels of any draft, or embarrass their freedom of passing while sailing in opposite directions. Disinterested and competent engineering, frequently revised and tested by experiment, has placed the cost of this enterprise, when fully completed, and upon a scale broad enough to accommodate the present and near future requirements of commerce, at a hundred millions of dollars.

Ample concessions have been made by the Nicaraguan Government and Costa Rica to the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, a corporation created by an act of our own Congress, for a period of ninety-nine years after the completion of the work. The proposed guaranty of the bonds of the company by the United States should make it certain that no onerous tolls can be exacted of commerce in order to pay dividends on fictitious stocks, while the ownership in trust of more than two-thirds of the stock of the company by the Government should render its financial liability but a nominal one, and its control and supervisory authority permanent and unquestioned.

Not only the responsibility assumed, but more especially the national character of the work and the world-wide attention it must command, make it a matter of first importance that every detail of construction and expenditure of money should be honest and proper so far as legislation can make it so. There should in such a work be not only no taint of jobbery or fraud, but not even the opportunity or plausible semblance of any such thing. I doubt not the distinguished and experienced gentlemen who have framed the measure, and given exhaustive attention to all its details, have sought to guard it carefully in these respects. And yet, Mr. President, in the light of a confessedly superficial examination of these features of the bill, the impression is made upon my mind there is not the direct, specific inspection of and control over the construction and expenditure there should be. I trust before a vote is reached it will be shown these impressions are not justified, or the bill will be so amended as to cure the defects.

About twenty-eight hours is the estimated time of the passage of a ship from ocean to ocean, including lockage. Lake Nicaragua and these basins afford abundant and secure fresh-water harborage to any number of vessels without interference in the operation of the canal, Over the low elevation of the mountain range the northeast trade winds are drawn, furnishing constant and cooling breezes, tempering the tropical air and rendering it healthful.

The superabundance of water at all seasons discharging through Lake Nicaragua will admit of enlarged canal facilities to meet any possible development of commerce. Frequent rapid streams along the route will enable the flooding of lake and canal with electric light, so that the movement of ships will not be hindered at night.

Thus lighted, and animated with the movement of every character of water craft, the route will present the most brilliant and enchanting landscape, the most noble and inspiring spectacle that eye can gaze upon and mind contemplate. A land of a midnight sun—the handiwork of man. This short waterway bisects a hemisphere, converts the continent of South America into an island, pierces a stretch of over 9,000 miles of sea wall at the center, and cuts off the detour the commerce of the north half of the world and the adjacent southern latitudes is now compelled to make around Cape Horn. It is the miracle of engineering science, stretching out its hand over the mountains, and their obedient walls opening a permanent highway to the chariots of the sea.

The saving is much more than one of time and distance. It is the escape of commerce from stormy and hazardous seas, and of perishable cargoes from exposure to torrid zones. The construction of this work means the shortening of the voyage between our Atlantic and Pacific ports about 10,000 miles, near two-thirds of the present sailing distance, and largely the substitution of steamers for sailing vessels. It will prove the grand complement of our coastwise navigation, doing for the commerce of the nation what the St. Mary's Canal is effecting for the interior Northwest.

The practical result will be to unite our Atlantic and Pacific seaboards. The people of the Pacific Slope having experienced more directly and sorely the disadvantages of separation than those of the East will, as a result, more keenly appreciate the benefits to result from this enterprise. This is more especially true of the people of the State I have the honor in part to represent in this Chamber than any other of the coast, because they are conscious of the surpassing resources of their State, of forest, of fisheries, of soil (blessed with climate adapting it to the widest range of production), of coal, of iron, of stone, of gold and silver, which they realize must remain comparatively dormant until the cheap and necessary transportation of this canal is afforded.

Transcontinental railroads have done much for the development of the Pacific coast, and each year will do more. Their increasing numbers and sharper competition are lowering rates and furnishing increased facilities and drawing thither population, wealth, and enterprise; but in the transportation of the staple and coarser freight I have mentioned, they can not give the cheap rates this age requires. The Great Lakes and their parallel railroads afford a conspicuous, the most conspicuous, illustration of what can be accomplished in the direct competition of land and water transportation in the development and handling of immense volumes of permanent traffic. In the mind's eye one quickly sees the immense fleets of exchanging commerce of European and Asiatic nations that will move through the Nicaragua Canal; so that of Australia and the Sandwich Islands; of the Republics on the eastern and western South American coasts, lying nearer this canal than Cape Horn; the large local traffic, the rich resources of Nicaragua will develop; and can perhaps form some conception of the enormous contribution the State of California will supply.

But let me, Mr. President, direct your attention for a moment to the northwest Pacific coast, the region lying opposite that tributary to the St. Mary's Canal. The watershed of this broad scope of country requires for its drainage the Columbia River, next in size to the Mississippi. Its principal harbor is Puget Sound, a landlocked sea, with islands, archipelagoes, and indentations, presenting a shore line of over 2,000 miles—peerless among the harbors of the world in the amplitude and security of its waters and the advantages it offers to commerce.

Although lying above the latitude of Duluth, there has not been a day since the ship of the first navigator entered it that ice has hindered a vessel or wind endangered one in its harbors.

No other landlocked sea so strongly pulsates with the ocean or more intimately shares its qualities. None could so easily be mistaken for an inland lake. None so heavily bordered with gigantic forests. None so walled with shores of coal and iron. With limited exceptions, from the coast to the snow line of the mountains, the region is covered with a growth of commercial timber of enormous size and the most varied adaptabilities. It is by competent persons computed there are in the State of Washington alone 21,000,000 acres of such timber lands.

The yield of 100,000 feet has been verified from many a single acre; and one tree is not infrequently found, standing as straight as a ship's mast, without limb or knot or flaw, to a height varying from 150 to 175 feet, and yielding 2,500 to 3,000 feet of lumber.

Experienced lumbermen place the average yield of the entire area at from 20,000 to 25,000 feet of sawed lumber per acre. This timber area reaches far southward into Oregon and northward into the British Possessions. The length, strength, elasticity, and durability and freedom from flaw give to the timber of these forests structural advantages that for special purposes justify its shipment, even at the present consuming freight rates, to the interior of our country, along the Atlantic coast, and, for spars and piling, to Western Europe.

Here, Mr. President, in these hundreds of billions of feet we have the lumber supply of a continent for indefinite years, which, upon the completion of this canal, will profitably bear transportation along our Atlantic coast and to the markets of Western Europe.

The soil upon which these forests stand, supplemented with a mild and favoring climate, guaranty fruit and vegetable production to sustain a dense population in the coming years.

The cold waters moving down from the ice seas of the North furnish food and habitat for innumerable schools of edible and oil-producing fish, while the rivers coming to the ocean from the glaciers of the mountains draw from their mysterious abodes in the sea myriads of salmon in quest of spawning grounds. The catch of the latter fish is already numbered by the millions of pounds.

I doubt if the banks off Newfoundland and Nova Scotia are richer in food fishes than these far more extensive seas, extending from the Columbia River and Puget Sound into the arctic regions of Alaska. It wants but the completion of this enterprise to quicken the fish industry of our northwestern seas into life and gigantic proportions. The unfailing harvests of these waters will burden many a vessel passing through its channel. But greater than the wealth of sea or forest is that beneath the surface of the ground. Development and discovery are daily adding to its extent and richness. Measures of excellent coking, steam, and heat-producing coals underlie much of the Puget Sound basin, easy of access and within short distances from tide water.

At short intervals from the British line, almost to the Columbia River, these coal measures have been found, and in many places opened. But nature, in her prodigality, in close proximity, has bestowed practically unlimited stores of iron and Bessemer ores and quarries of limestone. Where, Mr. President, I ask, upon our favored continent or in any part of the habitable globe, in so genial a climate, and almost within hearing of the throbbing of the sea (the unwearing and unmonopolizable highway of commerce), will you find such an assemblage of the resources of wealth and of elements fundamental and indispensable to the wants of our civilization?

But, Mr. President, let us pass beyond the Cascade Mountain Range, upon whose icy battlements are stationed the unrelieved sentries of the centuries, Mounts Baker, Rainier, Adams, and Hood, keeping guard between the kingdom of the land and the empire of the sea, and enter the comparatively treeless region, scored with mountains, high plateaus, and valleys, with climate more unlike that of the seacoast than can be found in distances of many hundred miles east of the Alleghanies or in the Mississippi Valley. Yet the mild winds from tropical oceans breathe warmth over these high latitudes and elevations, softening their winters to those of Virginia and Pennsylvania.

The mountains of this country, circling from the northwest to the southeast in a radius of 150 miles, with Spokane as a center, and thence on through Idaho into Montana, are found rich beyond fable in lead, silver, and gold, while the plateaus of Eastern Washington and Oregon and Western Idaho afford a cereal belt more prolific and certain in yield, with a soil more durable and seasons of seeding and harvest more favorable, than any part of our country or of the world, so far as I know. An intelligent and trustworthy farmer in the Walla Walla Valley assured me that the average wheat yield of his large farm for the past twenty years had been 40 bushels per acre. The Senators from Oregon and the senior Senator from the State of Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], who a few years since drove with me for hours among these grain fields, can assure you this statement is not overdrawn. Were it not for this conspiring of favorable circumstances wheat culture could not be carried on so far away from the markets of the world.

In a sea voyage from the Columbia River or Puget Sound to Europe, twice carrying the cargo through the tropics, consuming from four and a half to five and a half months, the farmer of the far Northwest is forced to be guarantor against every contingency of sea and land, of middlemen and trusts, and, lastly, of the market uncertainties of a coming year's crop, which are upon him before the port of delivery is reached. The last census reveals the fact that the State of Washington is only surpassed by the State of New York in the production of hops, and is closely followed by the State of Oregon.

I noticed a few days ago in a Tacoma paper that aside from the wheat loaded at that port in steamers for San Francisco there had been 5,000,000 bushels shipped foreign since harvest, and that a fleet of eleven ships was in the harbor waiting cargo, while fourteen additional grain ships were on the way thither to be loaded. I might cite something like this of Seattle and Portland, but simply direct attention to the incident as a hint of the grain production of the region when once developed. The completion of the interoceanic canal works a radical and happy revolution in this important agricultural interest and places the harbors of Puget Sound in a position of advantage in the shipment of grain. The lines of navigation from its ports to all markets will be open every day of the year to every character of vessel that floats the seas.

From the time of shipment to final destination no rehandling of cargo will be required. The highway over which this heavy traffic passes will not be liable to wear or be made subject to monopoly, but free to unfettered competition. The result must be, under the inspiration of low rates, enhanced values and enlarged markets, the rapid and gigantic development of every resource and industry I have mentioned, affording a volume of traffic through the Nicaragua Canal little dreamed of at this time. As against the embargo placed upon lake navigation for nearly half the year, following close after the season of garnering, and the rehandling of cargoes in transit to the Atlantic seaboard, the advantages I have enumerated will cause the reach of interior shipment to Puget Sound to constantly enlarge. So you perceive, Mr. President, there is scarcely a limit to be placed upon the traffic the Pacific Northwest will contribute to this canal.

My constituency realize the advantages this great enterprise will confer upon them and their locality, and in return the volume of traffic the Northwest coast will contribute, and the additional guaranty of success it will give to the projectors of the work. They have desired me to call attention to their special and direct interests in the early completion of the canal, not that they look upon it narrowly and regard its benefits local and partial, but because as yet so little is known of this part of our country. Their sweep of vision, Mr. President, takes in a broader, a more patriotic, and a more comprehensive horizon.

They foresee among the beneficent results of this work a more practical drawing together of the remote parts of our vast domain, a firmer welding and cohesion of the widely-separated sections of our country; a stronger feeling of neighborhood and community between our Atlantic and Pacific seaboards; a more actual and vital sense of union than we have before experienced.

They realize through this achievement the naval arm of this Government will be strengthened and rendered doubly available; the hazards of our unprotected seaboards reduced; and temptations to presumption and aggression taken away from nations whose interests and ambitions are brought in conflict with our own.

In the use of this channel by the ships of all nations they also foresee enhanced facilities to general trade, a readier and more economical and consequently a greater exchange of commodities among commercial peoples; a closer and stronger network of common interests, binding together the subjects of alien governments, rendering peace more indispensable and war more obnoxious. The feasibility of the work has been demonstrated. Its necessity is present and imperative. Its consummation is inevitable. It is too great and costly for private enterprise. It can not survive a national foundling. It is offering itself for adoption to some wealthy and dominant commercial nation. The offering is too precious to remain long unaccepted. Opportunity when so presented does not long delay and rarely returns.

It is first presented to the United States. It will be a monument to the civilization of this age, the crowning public work of the century, far more to the western hemisphere than the Suez Canal to the eastern, and therefore should be constructed by citizens of our Republic, and remain under the control and supervision of our Government.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I move the reference of the resolution the Senator from Washington [Mr. ALLEN] read at the beginning of his remarks to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be so referred in the absence of objection.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, on the resolution to which the remarks of the Senator from Washington [Mr. ALLEN] have been addressed, I desire to submit a very few words before asking the Senate to act upon it.

Mr. HISCOCK. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to me to introduce two bills?

Mr. MORGAN. I yield for that purpose.

ADDITIONAL BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HISCOCK (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1447) for the relief of Secor & Co., Perine, Secor & Co., and the executors of Zeno Secor; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1448) for the relief of David Myerle, executor of Phineas Burgess, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask the Senator from Alabama to yield to me that I may introduce a bill.

Mr. MORGAN. Very well.

Mr. BUTLER introduced a bill (S. 1449) to revive the grade of lieutenant-general in the Army of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 1450) to incorporate the "Zoo" Street Railway Company of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1451) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Kansas City, in the State of Kansas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1452) for the relief of the occupants of the town site of El Reno and to confirm the entry made by J. A Foreman for the lands covered thereby, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1453) for the relief of John K. Miller; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1454) for the relief of W. H. L. Pepperell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Alabama will yield to me, I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

INTERJECTION OF MORNING BUSINESS.

Mr. HALE. I will not interpose an objection now to Senators introducing bills and petitions and matters that properly belong to the morning hour, but I want to protest against what is a growing habit in the Senate, that instead of the morning hour being devoted, as it should be, to routine business and then the routine business end, it is the habit of Senators—and I know that I do it myself sometimes under pressure, which I ought not to do—of interrupting Senators in the midst of their speeches to introduce a petition or a bill or something which should be confined to the morning hour. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], on the point of addressing the Chair, was interrupted by a Senator who desired to introduce a bill by request, showing that there was no particular interest in it. When that was assented to courteously by the Senator from Alabama, who is always courteous, that let loose several other Senators. This has become a nuisance, and I for one propose hereafter, when a Senator is engaged in addressing the Senate or ready to address the Senate, to object to any interruption of this kind. I do not object now, but hereafter I shall object.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, while agreeing that the views of the Senator from Maine are just and appropriate, I am not making any question about that on this occasion. I shall join him in trying to have a better understanding on that subject.

MARITIME CANAL OF NICARAGUA.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution yesterday submitted by Mr. MORGAN, instructing the Committee on Foreign Relations to inquire into the condition of the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, at an early day in this session the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] who is not now in his seat, presented a bill in respect of the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, which is a copy of the bill that was reported by the unanimous action of the Committee on Foreign Relations at the last session of Congress and was not acted upon for want of time. Mr. SHERMAN'S bill has gone to that committee, but I thought it was my duty, as a friend of this enterprise, to avail myself of the provision which is found in section 6 of the charter of the company granted in 1889, which reads as follows:

SEC. 6. Said company shall make a report on the first Monday of December in each year to the Secretary of the Interior, which shall be duly verified on oath by the president and secretary thereof, giving such detailed statement of its affairs, and of its assets and liabilities, as may be required by the Secretary of the Interior, and any willfully false statement so made shall be deemed perjury and punishable as such. And it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to require such annual statement and to prescribe the form thereof and the particulars to be given thereby.

And, in accordance with that law, to provide for a full examination of the present condition of the enterprise.

That annual report, Mr. President, has been duly made by the canal company, but I have not a copy of it before me, not expecting that I should need it on this occasion. With the permission of the Senate I will insert it in my remarks.

The report is printed in Executive Document No. 4, as follows:

Letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the report of the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, in compliance with law.

December 10, 1891.—Referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, December 9, 1891.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith for the information of the Senate a copy of the report of the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, submitted to this Department on the 7th instant, in accordance with section 6 of an act of Congress approved February 20, 1889, entitled "An act to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua."

Very respectfully,

JOHN W. NOBLE, Secretary.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

THE MARITIME CANAL COMPANY OF NICARAGUA,
44 Wall Street, New York, December 7, 1891.

SIR: In compliance with the requirements of its charter, I beg leave to hand you herewith the annual report of the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua to December 1, 1891.

I am, very obediently, yours,

THOMAS B. ATKINS, Secretary.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE MARITIME CANAL COMPANY OF NICARAGUA.

SIR: Pursuant to section 6 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua," approved February 20, 1889, which provides that said company shall make a report on the first Monday of December in each year to the Secretary of the Interior, and, in accordance with the instructions received from you prescribing the form of such report and the particulars to be given thereby, the said Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua hereby reports as follows:

First. That the regular annual meeting of the company was held at No. 44 Wall street, in the city of New York, on the 7th day of May, 1891, pursuant to the provisions of the by-laws, and that at such meeting Mr. Henry E. Howland was elected a director of said company, to fill the vacancy in the class of 1892 caused by the death of Mr. Frederick Billings, and Messrs. Alfred B. Darling, Charles C. Glover, Franklin Fairbanks, C. Ridgely Goodwin, and Alexander T. Mason were duly elected directors of said company, to fill the places made vacant by the class whose term of office expired on the said 7th day of May, 1891, and to serve for the period of three years, as provided for in the said act of incorporation. That since the said annual election the Hon. James B. Eustis has been elected a director, to fill the vacancy existing in the class of 1892 by reason of the death of the Hon. Joseph E. McDonald, who departed this life on the 21st day of June, 1891.

Second. That the board of directors of said company as now constituted is composed of the following stockholders:

Class of 1894.—Alfred B. Darling, Franklin Fairbanks, C. Ridgely Goodwin, and Alexander T. Mason.

Class of 1893.—James Roosevelt, Joseph Bryan, Hiram Hitchcock, Thomas B. Atkins, and Horatio Guzman (Nicaraguan director).

Class of 1892.—Charles P. Daly, Daniel Ammen, Horace L. Hotchkiss, Henry E. Howland, and James B. Eustis.

A majority of the above-named directors are citizens and residents of the United States. The vacancy in the class of 1894, caused by the resignation of Mr. Charles C. Glover, has not yet been filled.

Third. That at a meeting of the board of directors, held, pursuant to notice, on the said 7th day of May, 1891, at the office of the company, No. 44 Wall street in the city of New York, the following officers were duly elected to serve for the ensuing year, to wit: President, Hiram Hitchcock; vice-president, Charles P. Daily; secretary and treasurer, Thomas B. Atkins.

That all of the officers so elected are citizens and residents of the United States.

That at said meeting the following directors were elected members of the executive committee, as provided for in the by-laws of said company, to wit: James Roosevelt, chairman; Hiram Hitchcock, Horace L. Hotchkiss, C. Ridgely Goodwin, and Alexander T. Mason.

Fourth. That during the past year operations on the Nicaragua Canal have been prosecuted with due diligence and energy, and much progress has been made in the actual work of construction. Many of the accessory works referred to in the last annual report of this company as being then in progress have been extended and, in some cases, carried to a completion. The railroad which was under construction from the Atlantic port to the divide has been completed and fully equipped for a distance of 11 miles, and the same is now in operation. The grade of the road has been raised, a large number of culverts built, and the roadbed and track perfected and placed in first-class condition. Several miles of switches, side tracks, and turn-outs have also been constructed, and the rolling stock now consists of 4 locomotives, 50 cars, and other requisite appliances. The machine shops have been enlarged, and are now equipped with a useful and very valuable plant for making repairs, including a varied and extensive assortment of modern machinery and tools, and also with facilities which afford means for such other mechanical work as is necessary and incidental to the construction of the canal.

The jetty or breakwater, which is to protect the harbor entrance on the Atlantic coast from the effects of shifting sand, has been extended into the ocean to a distance of 1,000 feet or more, and the spaces between the piles are now being filled in with rock and hydraulic cement. A second breakwater has been commenced on the west side of the harbor for the protection of the same against northerly storms. Several of the large dredges which were purchased last year from the American Contracting and Dredging Company have been in active operation, and about 1 mile of actual excavation along the line of the canal has been made from the harbor inland, and a channel formed, varying in width from 150 to 230 feet, and being about 17 feet deep.

Important work has also been done during the past year on the Machuca Rapids, and quantities of rock removed from the bed of the San Juan River at that point. On the west side of the lake, 8 miles of the route of the canal have been cleared of timber and undergrowth, and the line of the railroad which is to extend from the lake to the Pacific has been carefully surveyed and located. The large plant owned by the company in Nicaragua has received many important additions during the past twelve months, and is in the very best condition. The buildings now occupied consist of five groups, covering an area of about 1¼ acres, as follows:

Headquarters, 8 buildings; floor space, 13,986 square feet. Hospitals, 10 buildings; floor space, 14,174 square feet. La Fe department, 8 buildings; floor space, 21,869 square feet. Railroad headquarters, 9 buildings; floor space, 18,778 square feet. Camp Cheney, 4 buildings; floor space, 7,100 square feet. Making a total of 39 buildings, having a floor space of 75,902 square feet. In addition to these are numerous and extensive wharves equipped for unloading heavy freights, sheds, water tanks, and other smaller structures.

The health of the employés of the company has been excellent, and the sanitary conditions of the various camps and headquarters has been maintained at the high standard of previous years. During fourteen months there have been admitted into headquarters hospital 1,669 patients, of which number there have been discharged cured or improved 1,646. The total number of deaths has been 23, of which 5 were due to accidents, 6 to chronic diseases contracted before entering the company's employ, and 12 to diseases contracted while in the employ of the company; so that out of 1,669 patients only 12, or seven-tenths of 1 per cent, have died from diseases that may be termed climatic.

In March, 1891, the Hon. Warner Miller, president of the Nicaragua Canal Construction Company, accompanied by a large staff, visited the Republic of Nicaragua and made a complete and thorough examination of the entire line of the canal and of the numerous works connected with the construction thereof. The reports received from this expedition have been most gratifying, and show that the work already accomplished has been done in a systematic manner, with all possible care, thoroughness, and dispatch, and within the estimates of the engineers.

The results already achieved may be summarized as follows: The completion of the final surveys for location and construction; the restoration of the harbor of San Juan del Norte to the extent of securing an easy entrance to the port of vessels of 12 feet draft; the construction of extensive wharves and landing facilities; the erection of permanent buildings for offices, quarters, hospitals, storehouses, shops, etc., having an area of an acre and three-fourths; the building of a large number of temporary camps for the accommodation of employés; the completion of a telegraph line, placing the New York office in ready communication with every part of the work; the clearing of the canal line of timber for some 20 miles; the completion of the surveys and plans for the location and construction of the railroad systems; the acquisition by purchase of the most valuable and efficient dredging plant to be found anywhere in America under one management; and the actual excavation of the canal line for a distance of about 1 mile inland.

Fifth. That the interests of this company are at present represented in the Republic of Nicaragua by the Hon. Henry C. Hall, as resident agent at Managua, while Mr. Louis Chable represents the corporation in a similar capacity at San José, in the Republic of Costa Rica.

Sixth. That since the organization of the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua 10,145 shares of the capital stock of said company have been subscribed for at par, amounting in the aggregate to the sum of $1,014,500, of which amount $1,001,450 have been paid into the treasury in cash; that there has been paid into the treasury from other sources about $23,178.53, making the total amount of cash received $1,024,628.53; that the other assets of the company consist of its capital stock, of the concessions, rights, privileges, and franchises which it now owns, and of the plant, equipment, materials, lands, buildings, structures, railways, steamboats, dredges, locomotives, cars, machinery, telephone and telegraph lines, tracks, sidings, turn-outs, warehouses, stores, machine shops, supplies, and other property in Central America, including the lands situated between the lake and the Pacific, which were purchased from the Government of Nicaragua for the route of the canal at the cost of $50,000, in accordance with the provisions of the Nicaraguan concession.

Seventh. That since the organization of the company it has expended and issued, for property, work, and labor done, and materials furnished in the execution of the work of constructing the canal and in administration expenses, the sum of $799,555.02 in cash and 28,000 shares of the full paid capital stock of the company, of the par value of $2,800,000, and is obligated for $6,000,000 of its first-mortgage bonds. It has also issued 180,000 shares of its capital stock, of the par value of $18,000,000, in payment for concessionary rights, privileges, franchises, and other property.

Eighth. That the liabilities of the company consist of the amounts still due under the concessions granted to the company; of the $6,000,000 of bonds before mentioned, the said bonds being due to the Nicaragua Canal Construction Company for work and labor done and materials furnished in the execution of the work of constructing the interoceanic canal, and of cash liabilities outstanding and unpaid to an amount not exceeding $30,000.

Ninth. That a detailed description of the proposed canal and the work to be accomplished in its construction, together with the maps showing the route thereof as the same has been finally located, was annexed to the last annual report of this company, to which reference is hereby made for said particulars.

In witness whereof the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua has caused its corporate seal to be hereunto affixed and these presents to be signed by its president and secretary this 7th day of December, A. D. 1891.

I was obliged to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] for suggesting an amendment to my resolution, which was drawn up hastily yesterday at my desk, which amendment penetrates still further into the condition of this company than my resolution probably contemplated, for the friends of this measure and the friends of this canal desire that there shall be no misunderstanding at all about any feature of this project. It is a very great matter, one of very serious public consideration, one in respect of which we should submit to no trifling and no mere whitewashing or passing over defects, troubles, or difficulties.

The condition of the canal at this moment is such as that the Congress of the United States owes it to the country, as well as to the canal company, that whatever action is to be taken by Congress should be taken as speedily as a full investigation and fair discussion will admit. If we are not going to adopt, in substance, the plan suggested by the Committee on Foreign Relations at the last session, or some other plan for giving assistance to this enterprise by the Government of the United States, it is the highest duty we owe to the company and to the people that we should get out of the way and let the company go on and build its canal without our interference.

So I have thought, and the Senator from Ohio has also concluded, that it was best to bring this subject up early in the session, and to have the attention of Congress directed to it closely and carefully, so that every particle of the ground connected with it might be inspected narrowly, and a just conclusion reached; for if we can not assist this company in building this canal; if we can not now through the agency of the company exercise a control over this canal such as I think the destiny of the people of the United States will require should be exercised; if we must postpone this in deference to uninformed or doubting public opinion on this great question, let us postpone the whole matter at once, so far as we are concerned, and rely upon the sublimity of luck to get that control of it hereafter, which we are bound to have as the ruling commercial power on this hemisphere.

The project of the committee at the last session was one which I avow here to have been an effort to get just as close to the control of this canal as existing conditions will permit us to do. We can not exercise sovereignty over it. The right to exercise a limited sovereignty or a limited territorial control over it was stipulated for by the Administration of President Arthur, but the treaty negotiated by Mr. Frelinghuysen came here and was rejected. I speak of it publicly because it has become a public document. After that the Government of Nicaragua, prosecuting its purpose, which has always been patriotic, considered in reference to Nicaraguan affairs, gave a concession to certain citizens of the United States. They came to Congress and got a charter based upon that concession, in which is found the provision which I have just read, showing that the Congress of the United States, in the creation of that charter, exercised, and continues to exercise by careful provision, a supervision over the operations of the company so as to require annually a detailed and specific report of their condition, their assets, their liabilities, and all that is connected with them.

The Government of the United States, while disavowing in the beginning of this work any intention or expectation or purpose of subsidizing it in any form whatever, yet retained over this corporation the sort of control which has been indicated in the language I have just read from the charter, and we are, therefore, not disconnected with it as a government, nor can we, until that act is repealed or that section is changed, ever disconnect ourselves as a government from it. Our governmental control and supervision in a certain sense and in a certain degree will go along with the development of this work now and henceforward until we change it.

I am very glad that we are not to be disconnected from it, for the reason that when we are so relieved of all connection of a political or legislative character with this canal project some other government will be found, probably, to come forward and take up the work and control the canal, because it is impossible in the nature of things that so great a gateway between the Atlantic and the Pacific Oceans for the commerce of the world can escape being controlled by some powerful government. Nicaragua can not do it, Costa Rica can not do it, any more than Egypt could control the Suez Canal. Great Britain saw the necessity of coming into control of the transit through that canal, and did it very much on a plan like that we are doing now, except that she went into the market after the canal had been built and bought up the stock so as to have the controlling interest.

The security of the transit of commerce in ships through the Isthmus of Suez and of Darien requires that their control should engage the attention and good offices of some stable and powerful government. All the maritime nations expect such control over these gateways of commerce.

I do not assume to prophesy, Mr. President, but it seems to me that to the dullest apprehension the time is not distant in the future when this canal will be built. The work will be constantly progressive; it will go right on to completion; and when it is done, then the most momentous question that the people of the United States will have to contend with or to decide in respect of their commerce will be whether they shall control that canal. I prefer to begin to do it now. I prefer to anticipate by a few years the lapse of events, and to put ourselves into such a relation with that canal now as that no nation of this earth can rationally object, either Nicaragua or any other nation; and in doing so I think it wisest and best to take that control of this company which I think we have a right to do under the sixth section of the act I have read; that control of this company which will enable us to secure to our coastwise commerce and to the other commerce of the United States and to the commerce of the world cheap transit from ocean to ocean; so that the canal shall not stand as a burden upon the commerce of the world at a cost of $300,000,000, we will say—for that is about what it will be—when it ought not to cost, at the outside, exceeding $100,000,000.

Now I know, Mr. President, that being a Democrat, and I trust a very sound one, I am questioned continually in the minds of my confrères here upon the attitude which I hold towards this proposed legislation. In what I have had the honor to say in the Senate about it on previous occasions, I think I have vindicated my own attitude, but I have some recent authority on that question which I desire to call the attention of the Senate to for a moment, which is so high and so excellent and comes from a source for which I have such great respect, that I hope the Senate will excuse me while I read some remarks that were submitted in the other House yesterday on a joint resolution pending there for the purpose of chartering ships, etc., and sending supplies to Russia. That eminent statesman and very accomplished orator, Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky, had the floor, and he asked my colleague, Mr. OATES of Alabama, a question, to which he gave a very frank response, as he always responds frankly and clearly to whatever question is submitted to him on the floor of the House or elsewhere. Said Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, addressing his remarks to the gentleman from Alabama:

Now, if the gentleman will allow me, I want to call his attention to another question, because I know how much he has studied this matter and what authority any statement from him carries. I wish to ask him whether he has any doubt of the constitutional power of Congress, in a matter of foreign intercourse, intercourse between us and foreign nations, to vote an appropriation like this—a doubt which I confess I was much surprised to hear expressed by so very admirable a constitutional lawyer as my friend from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER].

In reply to that, Mr. OATES said:

I am not in favor of the hot haste which would appear to be desired by the gentleman from New York on my right [Mr. RAINES]. That gentleman said that he would like to know from the gentleman from Texas or from some other gentleman who invented the idea that Congress has no constitutional right to appropriate money for the relief of the suffering people in any portion of this country, and to vote public moneys to charities. He wanted to know whether that idea did not originate with President Cleveland, who vetoed the Texas seed bill. I can inform the gentleman that no one has a patent upon that discovery. It is old and sound Democratic doctrine that Congress has no such power; but his party, in view of the precedents they have established, are entitled to a patent for disregarding constitutional limitations in this respect. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But, sir, the question in regard to such power is not a new one; it is an old one. It has been discussed in the Congress of the United States for many years and on different occasions. And in answer to the question propounded by my friend from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] I will say that I have very carefully examined on previous occasions the debates upon appropriations for the relief of suffering caused by the earthquake at Caracas, and for the relief of the starving Irish during the famine of 1848 as well as in 1880, the periods referred to by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT]. From my investigation, it seems to have been the conclusion of a majority both in the Senate and in the House upon those occasions that the Constitution of the United States is a limitation upon the power of Congress within the territory over which the Constitution was intended to operate; in other words, that it is a limitation upon the parties to its creation; and although it seems paradoxical to say that Congress may aid the people of other nations with charity voted out of the Treasury, but has no right to vote such charity to any portion of our own people, yet that seems to be the fact beyond controversy to the mind of any lawyer who will thoroughly investigate the question.

This results from the fact that the Constitution is a compact—national, it is true, in regard to every power by it delegated to or vested in the Federal Government; but that Government, under the decisions of the Supreme Court as well as by the best precedents of Congress, has no power except that which is derived from that instrument with reference to any matter within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States. But, sir, when this nation deals with another, it does not act through the States, but as one nation. It is so recognized by other nations. Great Britain does not know any compact or agreement entered into between Massachusetts, New York, Georgia, and other States; she knows only the Government of the United States and deals with us as such. It was perhaps wisely left by that instrument to the sound discretion of Congress and the President to decide what powers may properly be exercised in dealing with other nations. This is almost a necessity, if not absolutely such, when you come to consider our relations with other nations.

But the case is different in respect to our internal affairs. When you read the history of the convention which framed the Constitution and of the conventions of the States which ratified it, you will see there the jealousy of the people for the rights and powers and privileges of their respective States, so that they were very chary of giving much power to the Federal Government, and none except such powers as were clearly delegated or granted. Hence the limit to the Federal Government, that it has no powers save such as are granted to it in the Constitution or such as are necessarily implied from express grants. What are implied? Why, sir, every power which is necessary in order to make the express grants efficacious and give them force and validity, but nothing more. Congress is invested with the choice of means to do this; as Chief Justice Marshall said, if the means are appropriate and adapted to the end they are constitutional. Farther than this the framers of the Constitution thought proper not to go; they thought proper to deny to Congress any other powers than those delegated in the instrument to be exercised over the people who were parties to its creation; but as to other peoples, as to foreign nations, there is no limit, and Congress can do whatever it pleases, being responsible to the people.

Congress, if it sees fit, has the power to pass this appropriation.

And if Congress, seeing fit, has the power in the opinion of that eminent lawyer to pass that appropriation for the sake of sweet charity, certainly Congress may pass an appropriation, if that is required, in respect of a subject which has in it a governmental purpose. What is a governmental purpose? Carrying the mails is a governmental purpose; regulating commerce is a governmental purpose; floating your Navy from sea to sea is a governmental purpose. If certain imbroglios in which we are now involved were to become flagrant we should find governmental purposes of a very valuable character even in digging a canal to get through Nicaragua and to save a transit of from ten to fifteen days for our men-of-war to the Pacific Ocean.

I allude to this, Mr. President, not because I have the slightest apprehension of such a thing, but to "point a moral," to "adorn a tale;" to show to the Senate that the times are not ripe merely, but pressing upon us, when we by a compulsion of our national dignity and power and authority and destiny must do something to connect these oceans by a water channel.

The very beautiful and remarkable statement made by the Senator from Washington [Mr. ALLEN] this morning to the Senate and the country ought to fill every heart in the United States with thankfulness and joy and gratitude to God that in so short a time the Congress of the United States have been able to reveal to the world such a garden of fruitfulness as Washington State. I had the honor, Mr. President, and I pride myself upon it, I believe, as much as anything that ever occurred to me in this body, to be amongst the early advocates of the admission of the State of Washington into this Union. Now behold what has come from that act! See the wonderful population that has instantly, almost, filled up the State of Washington and is bringing to the attention of the world treasures of wealth of which we scarcely dreamed and of which the world was almost absolutely ignorant!

Now let us bring the borders of our nation together; let our coast line be practically unbroken from the State of Maine to the State of Washington; let the East join hands with the West through this Nicaragua Canal or some other water way. If any man can find a better plan than this I will most cheerfully adopt it; but after years of most patient investigation I have found nothing that approximates it. Indeed, it seems to me as if the divine hand of Providence had placed the lakes of Nicaragua and Managua upon the summit line of the Cordilleras between these two seas with a view of extending an invitation to the genius of the American people and to the intrepidity of their enterprise, to encourage them to make a construction there which would honor this country more than any public work in which she was ever engaged; which would be worth more to the United States than all the territory east of the Rocky Mountains we acquired from Mexico; would give to the Mississippi River another mouth in the Pacific Ocean, and would cause all the commerce of the East and West, which seems to be invited by the very laws of nature themselves and the arrangement of the geography of that country, to float backwards and forwards through the Nicaragua Canal. Then we shall have entered, in the beginning of the next century, upon that glorious destiny which, as compared with what we have achieved, will be almost as light to darkness, and yet we have achieved in this century more than was ever accomplished by any people in all the tide of time.

If the Government of the United States will not do this work by assisting and controlling the only agency that is now available, let us get out of the way and allow the capitalists to construct it. It will cost the world enormous tribute, but better that than to permit our country to remain divided by the vast distance that measures double the length of the continent of South America, and these long lines at its most distant point from our possessions virtually broken by the cold and tempestuous seas that are so fatal to mariners and their ships.

I ask the Senate to adopt the resolution of instruction to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TURPIE in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE LA ABRA SILVER MINING COMPANY.

Mr. DOLPH. I move to take up for present consideration the bill (S. 539) to amend and enlarge the act approved June 18, 1878, entitled "An act to provide for the distribution of the awards made under the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico, concluded on the 4th day of July, 1868," which is Order of Business No. 4 on the Calendar.

I will announce before the motion is put that it is not my intention to press the bill to-day any further than to have the bill and the report read. I understand that the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] is interested either in this bill or another one which has been reported from the same committee.

Mr. MORGAN. It is the bill I reported that he is interested in.

Mr. DOLPH. I merely wish to occupy the time to-day to have the report and the bill read, to have the bill obtain the right of way, and to signify to parties having an interest in it that when we convene again next Monday, if nothing more important commands the attention of the Senate, I shall, after the morning business, ask the Senate to take up and consider and dispose of the bill.

Mr. VEST. Let the bill be read.

Mr. DOLPH. It is Order of Business No. 4 on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to taking up the bill indicated by the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. VEST. I suppose it is the bill in regard to the La Abra claim.

Mr. DOLPH. That is the bill.

Mr. VEST. Does the Senator propose to call it up now for action?

Mr. DOLPH. Yes, to have the right of way, but only to have the bill and the report read to-day, with the understanding that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] will be here on Monday, who, I understand, is interested in the measure, and to give all parties notice that it is the intention to press the bill for consideration.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Indiana I think is not interested except in a general sense in this bill.

Mr. DOLPH. He has already seen the report which I shall ask to have read. It is the report made during the Fiftieth Congress, which I desire to have read and spread upon the RECORD. Then I will let the bill be laid aside for adjournment or whatever else the Senate desires to do, and let it go over until Monday, when we meet again.

Mr. MORGAN. It is the bill which I reported that the Senator from Indiana has always manifested solicitude about. I do not think he cares particularly about this bill, except for its effect upon the other measure.

Mr. DOLPH. There can certainly be no objection to having the bill and report read to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. VEST. I did not understand what bill it is. I could not hear very distinctly. If it is the La Abra claim——

Mr. DOLPH. That is the case.

Mr. VEST. I want to fix upon some date when it will be convenient for all of us to take it up. Does the bill come from a committee now?

Mr. DOLPH. It comes from the Committee on Foreign Relations. It is upon the Calendar. I simply desire to call it up to-day and have the bill and report read, and then I will give way for an adjournment or let the bill be laid aside. I expect to call it up on Monday when we meet, the Senate having already agreed to adjourn from to-day until Monday.

Mr. VEST. I do not know that I shall be willing to take it up on Monday. I have no objections to its being taken up now simply for the purpose of having it read.

Mr. DOLPH. The friends of the bill were very unfortunate at the last session in postponing its consideration first for a member of the committee who was absent, and then for certain Senators who were interested, and the bill was postponed so long that we were unable to get it up for consideration when other important bills were pressing. I desire at this session to get it out of the way before we have more important business before the Senate. However, as to whether we shall proceed with the bill on Monday, that question can be discussed Monday, and if anybody is likely to be seriously inconvenienced by proceeding with it, the Senate can order some other disposition of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the bill and report being read now? The Chair hears none. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Whereas the Secretary of State, after investigating the charge of fraud presented by the Mexican Government as to the case of La Abra Silver Mining Company, has heretofore reported that the "honor of the United States requires" that said case "should be further investigated by the United States, to ascertain whether this Government has been made the means of enforcing upon a friendly power claims of our citizens based upon or exaggerated by fraud," but that "the executive government is not furnished with the means of instituting and pursuing methods of investigation which can coerce the production of evidence or compel the examination of parties and witnesses," and that "the authority for such an investigation must proceed from Congress;" and

Whereas the President of the United States has transmitted to Congress the recommendation of the Secretary of State that said case "be referred to the Court of Claims, or such other court as may be deemed proper, in order that the charge of fraud made in relation to said claim may be fully investigated:" Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That in further execution of the purpose of said act the Attorney-General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to bring a suit or suits in the name of the United States in the Court of Claims against La Abra Silver Mining Company, its successors and assigns, and all persons making any claim to the award or any part thereof in this act mentioned, to determine whether the award made by the United States and Mexican Mixed Commission in respect to the claim of the said La Abra Silver Mining Company was obtained, as to the whole sum included therein or as to any part thereof, by fraud or false swearing or other false and fraudulent practices on the part of the said La Abra Silver Mining Company, or its agents, attorneys, or assigns, and any defendant to such suit who can not be found in the District of Columbia shall be notified and required to appear in such suit by publication as the court may direct, in accordance with law, as applicable to cases in equity.

SEC. 2. That full jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the Court of Claims to hear and determine such suit and to make all interlocutory and final decrees therein, as the evidence may warrant, according to the principles of equity and justice, and to enforce the same by injunction or any proper final process, and in all respects to proceed in said cause according to law and the rules of said court, so far as the same are applicable. And the Secretary of State shall certify to the said court copies of all proofs admitted by the said Mixed Commission on the original trial of said claim, and the said court shall receive and consider the same in connection with such competent evidence as may be offered by either party to said suit.

SEC. 3. That an appeal from any final decision in such cause to the Supreme Court of the United States may be taken by either party within ninety days from the rendition of such final decree, under the rules of practice which govern appeals from said court; and the Supreme Court of the United States is hereby authorized to take jurisdiction thereof and decide the same.

SEC. 4. That in case it shall be finally adjudged in said cause that the award made by said Mixed Commission, so far as it relates to the claim of La Abra Silver Mining Company, was based upon or obtained through fraud or false swearing, or other false and fraudulent practices of said company or its assigns, or by their procurement, the President of the United States is hereby authorized to release the Government of Mexico from the further payment thereof to the extent that the same is so declared fraudulent, and to return to said Government any money paid by the Government of Mexico on account of said award, remaining in the custody of the United States, that has not been heretofore distributed to said La Abra Mining Company or its successors and assigns, which such court shall decide that such persons are not entitled, in justice and equity, to receive out of said fund.

SEC. 5. That during the pendency of said suit and until the same is decided it shall not be lawful for the Secretary of State to make any further payments out of said fund, on account of said award, to La Abra Silver Mining Company, or its legal representatives, attorneys, or assigns; and in case said court shall decide in said suit that said La Abra Silver Mining Company, or its successors and assigns, are, in justice and equity, entitled to any part of said award that shall remain to be paid or distributed, the Secretary of State shall proceed to distribute the same to the persons entitled thereto.

Mr. DOLPH. When reporting the bill at this session I did not make a written report, but at the second session of the Fiftieth Congress I submitted, by the direction of the committee, a written report, accompanied by evidence which had been taken by a subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations, concerning this claim. I ask that the report made at the Fiftieth Congress be read; that is, the report proper, without the testimony.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the reading of the report? The Chair hears none, and the report will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read Report No. 2705, Fiftieth Congress, second session.

Mr. MORGAN. If it would suit the Senator from Oregon, I ask that the report may be printed in the RECORD, without detaining the Senate by its reading.

Mr. DOLPH. It is not late in the day, and I should like to have as many members of the Senate as possible hear the reading of the report in order that they may intelligently act upon the bill.

Mr. MORGAN. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. DOLPH. I am not proposing to discuss the bill until some one attacks it, and so far as I am concerned, I will submit it to the Senate upon the report which I made when the evidence was fresh, and which was agreed to by the entire committee.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senate being very thin, would it not be quite as well to print the report in the RECORD as to have it read now? It will be referred to in the argument, of course.

Mr. DOLPH. I am not very tenacious upon the point.

Mr. HARRIS. It would be an economy of time, and I think quite as efficacious.

Mr. DOLPH. Probably we shall not get a fuller Senate to hear the report read than we have to-day, but I will let it be printed in the RECORD, although that may necessitate my presenting the matter to the Senate when we meet again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be ordered printed in the RECORD, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

The report is as follows:

[Fiftieth Congress, second session. Senate Report No. 2705.]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

March 1, 1889.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, submitted the following report to accompany bill S. 2632:

The Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2632) to amend and enlarge the fifth section of an act approved June 18, 1878, entitled "An act to provide for the distribution of the awards made under the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico, concluded on the 4th day of July, 1868," having had the same under consideration, respectfully report:

THE PROVISIONS OF THE BILL.

It is proposed in substance by the bill to direct a suit or suits to be brought by the Attorney-General of the United States, in the name of the United States, in the Court of Claims (jurisdiction being conferred upon the court to hear and determine the same) against La Abra Mining Silver Company and its assigns, of any portion of the award made by the United States and Mexican Mixed Commission under the convention between the United States and the Republic of Mexico, concluded on the 4th day of July, 1868, in respect of the claim of the said La Abra Company to determine whether the award was obtained as to the whole sum included therein, or as to any part thereof, by fraud, or false swearing, or other false or fraudulent practices on the part of said La Abra Company, its agents, attorneys, or assigns, with the right to either party to appeal from the final decision in any such suit to the Supreme Court of the United States; and in case it shall be finally adjudged in such suit that said award as to said company was based upon or obtained by false swearing, or other false and fraudulent practices of said company or its assigns, or by their procurement, to authorize the President to release the Government of Mexico from further payment thereof, and to return to the said Government any money paid by it on account of said award, remaining in the custody of the United States, to the extent the award is so determined fraudulent; and in case it shall be finally declared that said La Abra Silver Mining Company or its assigns are in justice and equity entitled to any part of said award that shall remain to be paid or distributed, to direct the Secretary of State to proceed to distribute the same to the persons entitled thereto.

THE QUESTIONS STATED.

The questions presented for the consideration of Congress by the bill are:

First. Whether the evidence presented by the Mexican Government to show that the award made by said mixed commission in respect of the claim of La Abra Company was procured by fraud, and the testimony taken by the committee, under the authority of resolutions of the Senate herein referred to, is of such a character as to require investigation by a competent tribunal to determine whether the United States in presenting the claim of La Abra Company to the mixed commission was not made the victim of fraudulent imposition.

Second. Whether Congress has the constitutional power to open the award and direct a suit to be brought to judicially determine, according to the principles of equity, whether the award, in whole or in part, was procured by fraud, in order that what the honor of the United States requires should be done in the premises may be done.

To determine the first of these questions requires a reference to the diplomatic and legislative history of the claim and a review of the evidence.

THE HISTORY OF THE CLAIM.

La Abra Silver Mining Company was incorporated and organized under the laws of the State of New York in 1865, with its principal office at the city of New York in said State.

The object of this incorporation was to work certain silver mines in the State of Durango, Mexico, and it prosecuted the business for which it was incorporated during portions of the years 1866 and 1867.

The Claims Commission, organized under the convention between the United States and Mexico, of July 4, 1868, rendered awards in favor of citizens of the United States for $4,125,622.20, and in favor of citizens of Mexico for $150,498.41. After deducting the awards to Mexican citizens, and making the proper allowance for differences in currency and coinage, there was due the United States from Mexico the sum of $3,865,498.42. It appears from the report of the Secretary of State of February 28, 1888, that up to that date the Government of Mexico had paid to the Government of the United States on account of these awards the sum of $3,495,293.61; and, as since that date another annual installment has been paid, the total amount received from Mexico is $3,791,359.66, leaving a balane now remaining unpaid of $74,138.76.

Among the awards in favor of the United States were those of La Abra Silver Mining Company for $683,041.30, or, in American gold (in which coinage the payments are made), $672,070.99, and of Benjamin Weil for $487,810.68. The amount heretofore paid by Mexico on account of La Abra award is $631,553.22. Out of the first five installments paid by Mexico there was distributed to the claimants of La Abra award the sum of $240,683.06. The Secretary of State then, under an Executive order, suspended further payments, and there are now retained by the State Department, on account of said award, eight installments, amounting to $390,870.16. The award was rendered by the umpire December 27, 1875, and a motion on behalf of the Mexican Government for a rehearing was overruled by him October 20, 1876.

By the provisions of said convention the payment of the total sum of the awards due from Mexico was to be made in annual installments, and, following the usual precedents in such cases, Mr. Fish, then Secretary of State, in 1877 asked Congress for the necessary legislation to enable him to adjust the awards with Mexico, and to make distribution to the respective claimants. The convention provided no method of distributing these awards, and it was necessary that Congress should provide by law for their payment into the hands of the persons entitled thereto. While a bill for this purpose was pending, the Mexican Government notified the Secretary of State that evidence, not within its knowledge or control before the awards were rendered, had been discovered, which, it was claimed, would establish the fact that the awards in the cases of La Abra Company and Benjamin Weil were procured by fraudulent impositions upon the commission and upon the Government of the United States, on the part of the claimants; and the Mexican minister presented the Department of State such evidence as he then claimed to possess, tending to show that said awards were procured by fraud.

The finality of the awards as between the two Governments was not denied by the Mexican Government, and the Mexican minister announced the intention of his Government to comply with the treaty by paying the installments as they became due.

The evidence presented by Mexico led to an examination of the cases by Congress. A bill to carry out the recommendations of Mr. Fish passed the House during the Forty-fourth Congress and was favorably reported in the Senate, but was recommitted to enable the committee to consider the complaints made by the Mexican Government as to the manner in which the awards in favor of La Abra Company and Weil were procured.

At the next session Mr. Davis of Illinois introduced a bill in the Senate which, with amendments, passed both Houses, and was approved June 18, 1878. This act authorized the Secretary of State to make distribution to the claimants of the money received from Mexico on all the awards except those of La Abra Company and Weil. The fifth section of the act was as follows:

"SEC. 5. And whereas the Government of Mexico has called the attention of the Government of the United States to the claims hereinafter named with a view to a rehearing: Therefore, Be it enacted, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to investigate any charges of fraud presented by the Mexican Government as to the cases hereinafter named, and if he shall be of the opinion that the honor of the United States, the principles of public law or considerations of justice and equity, require that the awards in the cases of Benjamin Weil and La Abra Silver Mining Company, or either of them, should be opened and the cases retried, it shall be lawful for him to withhold payment of said awards, or either of them, until such case or cases shall be retried and decided in such manner as the Governments of the United States and Mexico may agree, or until Congress shall otherwise direct.

"And in case of such retrial and decision, any moneys paid or to be paid by the Republic of Mexico in respect of said awards respectively shall be held to abide the event, and shall be disposed of accordingly; and the said present awards shall be set aside, modified, or affirmed, as may be determined on such retrial: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as an expression of any opinion of Congress in respect to the character of said claims, or either of them."

In accordance with the provisions of this section, the President [Mr. Hayes] caused an investigation to be made of the charges of fraud preferred by the Mexican Government, and Mr. Evarts, then Secretary of State, made a careful examination of the newly discovered evidence presented by Mexico, and submitted his conclusions thereon to the President August 12, 1879, to the effect:

"That the honor of the United States does require that these two cases should be further investigated by the United States to ascertain whether this Government has been made the means of enforcing against a friendly power claims of her citizens based upon or exaggerated by fraud."

But was of the opinion that any agreement with Mexico for the opening of the awards would involve the admission by the United States that the results of the convention were not final and conclusive between the two Governments.

President Hayes adopted the views of Secretary Evarts, and in communicating his report to Congress recommended that legislation should be enacted providing for the further investigation of these claims by some domestic tribunal.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs (of the House) reported a bill June 9, 1880, to empower the Court of Claims to make such an investigation. On a bill of like character the Senate Committee on the Judiciary at the same session reported adversely, on the ground that if an investigation of the claims was to be had, it should be by means of a diplomatic agreement providing for a new international commission. Congress having adjourned without making any provision in reference to La Abra and Weil awards, President Hayes, in the absence of Secretary Evarts, directed the Assistant Secretary of State to distribute to the claimants the installments which had been received and were then undistributed.

August 2, 1880, the Mexican Government, through the Mexican legation in this city, notified Secretary Evarts of the intention of that Government to commence suits in equity in the United States courts to impeach and set aside the two awards; and on August 4 Mr. Evarts replied that he could not but regard the proposed action of Mexico as a departure from the line of policy theretofore inaugurated in the diplomatic correspondence, and as being in distinct contravention to the articles of the convention with regard to the finality of the awards of the Commission. Mr. Evarts' note was regarded by Mexico as a diplomatic interdiction of the proposed legal proceedings, and they were accordingly abandoned.

When President Arthur came into office he suspended further distribution of the money received from the Mexican Government on account of the two awards, negotiated a convention with Mexico for a rehearing of the cases by a joint commission, and sent it to the Senate.

While that convention was pending in the Senate, in December, 1882, John J. Key, as assignee of Benjamin Weil and La Abra Company, instituted mandamus proceedings in the supreme court of the District of Columbia against Mr. Frelinghuysen, Secretary of State, to compel him to distribute the installments of the awards that Mexico had paid to the United States which had been withheld by the claimants by direction of President Arthur. The case was appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, and its decision dismissing the proceedings was rendered January 7, 1884. The judgment of the Supreme Court sustained the action of President Arthur in suspending distribution of the money received on account of said awards.

The treaty, which was pending in the Senate from July 20, 1882, till April 21, 1886, on the latter day failed to receive the required constitutional majority of two-thirds of the Senate, and left to Congress the duty reserved in the fifth section of the act of June 18, 1878, "to otherwise direct" what shall be done with the money received or to be paid to the United States under the award made in the claim of La Abra Company. On the 11th of May, 1886, President Cleveland sent a message to Congress transmitting a report from the Secretary of State, calling attention to the fifth section of the act above cited, and suggesting that the attention of Congress should be earnestly invoked to the consideration of the status of the Weil and La Abra claims, and the duty of the Executive in regard thereto in the event of the adjournment of Congress without further action concerning them.

This committee, on July 7, 1876, submitted a report recommending the passage of Senate bill 2207, which was similar in its provisions to the bill under consideration, the concluding portion of which report was as follows:

"This brief résumé of the correspondence between the two Governments shows that Mexico, while observing, in good faith, all her obligations under the convention, has earnestly and constantly urged upon the United States that these claims were fraudulent. This appeal to the spirit of justice can not be ignored, but should be met by a frank ond open examination by our own courts of the facts presented by Mexico. These claimants have no vested rights growing out of these claims which entitle them to come between Mexico and the United States, and to demand the payment of any part of these awards that are the outgrowth of fraud and perjury."

The Forty-ninth Congress adjourned without final action on the bill, and at the first session of the present Congress the subject was again brought to the attention of Congress by a special message from the President, which was sent to the Senate on the 5th of March last, in response to resolutions of the Senate, of December 21, 1887, and January 16, 1888, which were referred to this committee. This message was accompanied by a report from the Secretary of State, in which the condition of the funds paid by Mexico on account of the awards of the joint commission, and the executive and legislative stages of the history of La Abra and Weil claims, are stated in detail. The Secretary, after citing the conclusion of Secretary Evarts, "that the honor of the United States does require that these two cases should be further investigated by the United States, to ascertain whether this Government has been made the means of enforcing against a friendly power claims of our citizens based upon or exaggerated by fraud," and referring to the treaty concluded by Secretary Frelinghuysen with the Mexican envoy, for an international rehearing of the cases, uses this language:

"It is fair to assume that the rejection by the Senate of the treaty signed by Mr. Frelinghuysen, for an international rehearing of the awards, was in no sense an expression of opinion adverse to their investigation, which Mr. Evarts had recommended. It is rather to be regarded as an approval of the opinion which he also expressed, that the investigation should, under the circumstances, be made by this Government for itself, as a matter affecting solely its own honor.

"It is a remarkable fact that whenever, since the distribution of the Mexican fund was commenced, the deliberate judgment of the official authorized by Congress to make such distribution has been recorded upon the two awards in question, it has uniformly been to the effect that the evidences that the United States, in presenting the claims, had been made the victim of fraudulent imposition were of such a character as to require investigation by a competent tribunal, possessing appropriate powers for that purpose."

He then reviews the grounds upon which the claimants have insisted that the money paid by Mexico should be distributed to them, and states the question at issue as follows:

"The sole question now presented for the decision of this Government is whether the United States will enforce an award upon which the gravest doubts have been cast by its own officers in opinions rendered under express legislative direction, until some competent investigation shall have shown such doubts to be unfounded, or until that branch of the Government competent to provide for such investigation shall have decided that there is no ground therefor."

He adds that the duty of the Government to refuse to enforce an inequitable and unconscionable award has been repeatedly maintained in the most authoritative manner, and cites a number of cases where awards were set aside by Congress, by the courts, and by the Executive, and shows their similarity to the Weil and La Abra cases, in that the money which the claimants seek to obtain is under the control of the Government of the United States, and the demands for its distribution are demands against that Government.

"From this point of view," he says, "the question is not international but domestic; and it is not less so because its decision touches the pecuniary interests of Mexico as well as the honor of the United States." In this connection he quotes the following language of Chief Justice Waite, in delivering the judgment of the court in the case of Frelinghuysen vs. Key (110 U. S., 63):

"International arbitration must always proceed on the principles of national honor and integrity. Claims presented and evidence submitted to such a tribunal must necessarily bear the impress of the entire good faith of the government from which they come, and it is not to be presumed that any government will for a moment allow itself knowingly to be made the instrument of wrong in any such proceeding. No technical rules of pleading as applied in municipal courts ought ever to be allowed to stand in the way of the national power to do what is right under all the circumstances. Every citizen who asks the intervention of his own government against another for the redress of his personal grievance must necessarily subject himself and his claim to these requirements of international comity.

"As between the United States and the claimants, the honesty of the claims is always open to inquiry for the purpose of fair dealing with the government against which, through the United States, a claim has been made."

The Secretary further reports that upon the adjournment of the last Congress without action upon the bill pending in both Houses to provide for the investigation of the two awards in question by the United States, the attorneys for the claimants at once applied for the distribution of the moneys paid by Mexico on the awards and in his hands. Desiring to avoid further delay the Department of State, in pursuance of the act of March 3, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," sought the consent of the claimants in the Weil and La Abra cases to an investigation and decision of the allegations of fraud in relation thereto by the Court of Claims, but the attorneys in behalf of their clients declined the proffered investigation.

In concluding his report, to the end that the claims may be finally disposed of, he suggests to the President "that a recommendation be made to Congress to take action to provide expressly for the reference of the claims in question to the Court of Claims or such other court as may be deemed proper, in order that a proper investigation of the charges of fraud may be made."

The President, in transmitting this report to the Senate, urged Congress to "speedily signify its final judgment upon the awards referred to, and make the direction contemplated by the act of 1878, in default of which the money now on hand applicable to such awards now remains undistributed."

Pending the consideration in the committee of the bill accompanying this report and of the President's message, the authenticity of the newly discovered evidence presented by Mexico, and especially of certain written letters and press copies of letters of the officers and agents of La Abra Company contained in a letter-press copy book purporting to be the letter-press copy book of said company, being questioned by the counsel for La Abra Company, the committee thought proper to ask the Senate for authority to make an investigation respecting the claim, and upon their request the following resolutions were adopted by the Senate:

"IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, August 30, 1888.

"Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations have leave to require the attendance of witnesses before said committee, or a subcommittee thereof, to give evidence under oath respecting the claim of La Abra Silver Mining Company against the Government of Mexico.

"And said committee or subcommittee shall have the power to administer oaths to such witnesses.

"And the expenses of their attendance and other necessary expenses in the execution of this order shall be paid out of the funds appropriated for the contingent expenses of the Senate, on certificates issued by the chairman of said committee or subcommittee.

"Resolved (2), That counsel for or against said claimants shall be authorized to appear before said committee or subcommittee and examine and cross-examine any witnesses under the authority of this resolution."

The investigation under the authority of the foregoing resolutions was begun on the 24th of September, 1888, and has extended at various intervals up to the 27th ultimo.

The journal of the subcommittee designated to make the investigation and the testimony taken before it are appended to this report.

THE TESTIMONY.

The testimony taken by the committee is sufficient to establish beyond question the authenticity of the letter-press copy book of La Abra Company presented to the Secretary of State by the Mexican Government. It was identified before the committee by one of the superintendents of the company, Col. Julius A. De Lagnel, as the press copy book in use at the mines in Tayoltita, Mexico, during the time he was superintendent of the company's works, and he identified all the press copies of the letters signed by himself. The press copies of letters signed by Charles H. Exall, the superintendent who succeeded De Lagnel, and the press copies of the letters of James Granger and certain statements of his handwriting in the same book, as also the original letters of David J. Garth, the treasurer of the company, and of Charles H. Exall, were duly proved by competent witnesses to be genuine.

The letter book and original letters submitted by Mexico constitute the most important part of the newly discovered evidence upon which it relies to establish its charge of fraud and perjury in the procurement of the award.

D. J. Garth, the former treasurer of La Abra Company, and the agent of the company who conducted its business in New York and the company's correspondence with the superintendents of the company's works in the mines at Tayoltita during the operations of the company there, in his testimony before the committee admitted the receipt of the originals of nearly all of the letters addressed to him, written by De Lagnel and Exall, and copied in the press copy book, together with the genuineness of the letters purporting to have been written by himself. The letters in the press copy books appear to have been written and copied in the ordinary course of business, and the committee are satisfied beyond a doubt that they and the original letters of D. J. Garth and C. H. Exall produced by the Mexican Government, so far as they go, contain a correct history of the company's transactions at Tayoltita.

In the opinion of the committee the correspondence between the company's superintendents and agents at the mines in Mexico and the managing agent of the company in New York, accompanying this report, is sufficient, considered alone, to show the whole claim of the company to be fraudulent, and the claimant's testimony before the Mixed Commission, so far as it tended to fix the responsibility for the company's loss upon the Mexican Government, to have been rank perjury to show that the company had abandoned its mines because they did not pay for working; that the officers and agents of the company in New York had refused to furnish any more money to the superintendents at the mines, and that the company was bankrupt.

The idea of making a claim against the Mexican Government by the company, judging from this correspondence, appears to have been conceived long after the abandonment of the mines by the company, to have been a gross fraud in its inception, to have been based upon fraudulent allegations supported by false swearing and manufactured testimony; and it is impossible, in the face of the correspondence covering the period when the company was making preparations to work its mines in Mexico and while they were being worked, to conceive that the officers and agents of the company in New York were not active participants in the fraud.

A duly certified copy of the record of the case of La Abra Silver Mining Company against Mexico before the Joint Commission under the treaty of July 4, 1868, including all the evidence upon which the award was passed, has been furnished by the Department of State and is printed with the testimony taken by the committee.

The following is a brief review of the documentary and oral evidence submitted to the committee, compared with the allegations contained in the memorial of La Abra Company, presented to the Mixed Commission. That company represented in its memorial before the Joint Commission that it purchased in 1865 in Tayoltita, State of Durango, Mexico, certain silver mines of great value and extraordinary richness; that it sent intelligent agents to Mexico and made heavy and judicious expenditures on its mining property, to wit, over $300,000; that it had extracted a large amount of the richest ore; that it was subjected to threats, robberies, seizure, and confiscation by the authorities of mule-trains and supplies, forced loans, onerous taxes, imprisonment of its superintendent, murder of one of its officials, and other acts of violence, persecution, and interference by the Mexican civil and military authorities and people; that on account of these persecutions, outrages, and insecurity it was impossible to work the mines, and it was compelled to abandon them (in March, 1868); that in consequence of the forced abandonment the mines and buildings, of the value of $1,000,000, and the silver ore extracted, amounting to 1,000 tons, of the value of $500,000, were wholly lost to the company; that, if permitted to work the mines, the clear annual profits would have been $1,000,000; and that by the forced abandonment the company was utterly ruined. Damages were claimed to the amount of $3,030,000, and the award was rendered for $683,041.30.

At the time of the alleged forced abandonment no complaint whatever was made to the Department of State at Washington, to the Mexican Government, nor to the United States minister at the City of Mexico. It appears from the evidence before the committee that after the last superintendent returned to New York, in May, 1868, and made his report, the officers and directors of La Abra Mining Company took no steps to protect or recover possession of their property in Mexico; sent no agent there to look after or inquire into its condition, and did nothing whatever to maintain their rights. The claims convention with Mexico of July 4, 1868, was proclaimed February 1, 1869, and the memorial of La Abra Company was not filed before the Commission till June 14, 1870, more than two years after the abandonment of the mines.

In the opinion of the committee it is shown that there was no forced abandonment of the mines. Exall, the last superintendent, was the only witness before the Commission who pretended to give the circumstances of the forced abandonment of his own knowledge. Exall's deposition is completely overthrown by his own letters. Months before he left Tayoltita he informed the officers of the company in New York that the mines were not yielding any ores that it would pay to reduce, that he was out of funds and pressed on all sides with debts, and that unless relieved by remittances of money from New York he would be compelled on that account to abandon the property. Finally, January 24, 1868, he wrote to the treasurer in New York that unless he received money by the steamer of the next month, he would be compelled to come to New York and lay the embarrassed situation of the affairs before the company. It also appears that about this time Exall talked publicly concerning his intended visit to New York. The original and press copy of the following letter to the single remaining employé at the mines has been produced before the committee:

"TAYOLTITA, February 21, 1868.

"Mr. JAMES GRANGER:

"SIR: As circumstances are of such a nature as to compel me to leave for San Francisco, and probably for New York, to inquire into the intentions of this company, I place in your hands the care and charge of the affairs of the La Abra S. M. Co., together with its property.

"You are invested hereby with all power confided to me, of course, acting in all your transactions with an eye to the interests of the company.

"This will, to you, should occasion require it, be ample evidence of the right possessed by you to act in their behalf.

"Very respectfully,

"CHARLES H. EXALL,
"Adm'r La Abra S. M. Co."

The date fixed by Exall, in his deposition before the Commission, of his expulsion from the mines was on or about March 20, 1868. An original letter of Exall's was produced in evidence before the committee, dated at Mazatlan (the seaport, 150 miles from the mines), March 15, 1868, which shows that he had been at that place some days when the letter was written, and that he had left the property and mines in the quiet possession of Granger, his assistant; that he was on his way to San Francisco and New York to obtain money from the company to pay the overdue salary of himself and his assistant, Granger, and that he expected to return. It was also proved before the committee that Exall met the United States consul when he passed through Mazatlan, and that he made no complaint to him and said nothing to him about any trouble with the authorities or people at the mines.

Copies of other letters of Exall, found in the letter-press copy-book, show that Granger was still in peaceable possession August 12, 1868, undisturbed by the authorities, and witnesses have testified before the committee that he continued to occupy the premises owned by La Abra Company for a considerable time thereafter, and that, receiving no aid or remittances of money from the company in New York, he proceeded to sell off such of the movable property as he could so dispose of, to pay his own claims against the company, and that he at last voluntarily abandoned the property. It is also shown that the Mexican authorities did not claim to exercise any control or authority over the property of the company after Exall's departure, and that since Granger ceased to occupy the premises they have been taken possession of by individual miners, under the Mexican law of denouncement, as abandoned property.

The main allegation in the petition of La Abra Company presented by the Mixed Commission, to wit, that the company was dispossessed of its property by the forcible interference of the Mexican authorities, is disproved and shown to have been wholly false, and this mainly by correspondence of the company's own officers and agents; and it appears by the testimony taken by the committee that the abandonment of the property and the failure of the company were wholly due to the poverty of the mines and the consequent financial embarrassment of the company.

The history of the company, as disclosed by the testimony, in brief is as follows: The attention of certain gentlemen in New York was directed to La Abra mine, in the State of Durango, Mexico, which was claimed to have produced fabulous wealth in the time of the Spanish domination, and which, although in recent years abandoned, it was asserted would again produce great wealth if a projected tunnel was completed. A syndicate was formed in New York, and two of its members accompanied the "promoters" of La Abra sale to Mexico to inspect the mine. Neither of the two members of the syndicate possessed any knowledge of mining, and the experts who participated in the negotiation were all connected with the selling parties. At the mines the representatives of the syndicate were shown very rich specimens of ores, assaying as high as $1,300 per ton, and as a result of their investigation they made a purchase on the spot of La Abra mine, paying for the same $22,000 in stock of the company. They also bought of a Spaniard and a Mexican a number of other mines at the same place, and paid for them $50,000 in gold. These mines were represented to be at that time producing very rich ores, and the syndicate were shown by the owners "stacks of silver * * * some tons * * * of pure silver," the supposed recent product of these latter mines.

The representatives of the syndicate returned to New York, and La Abra Company was incorporated, and proceeded to make preparations to work the mines on a large scale with the improved American methods. The Mexican machinery and improvements were removed. New machinery was bought in California, and new buildings were erected for the enlarged operations of the company. Owing to the remoteness and mountainous character of the locality, and the disturbed condition of the country occasioned by the French war then in progress, this work was greatly delayed and unexpectedly expensive. While it was in progress a large amount of ore was extracted from the mines; and when the mill was finished and the ores began to be reduced to silver, it was found that they were of a very low grade and would not pay for the cost of mining and reduction.

The company in New York had assessed the stock to its full value and collected the assessments, and when the stockholders refused to pay further assessments it for a time resorted to loans. Finally its credit was exhausted, its drafts protested, a heavy judgment was obtained against it, and it became hopelessly bankrupt. All this occurred some months before the date of the alleged forced abandonment of the mines. The treasurer of the company notified the last superintendent that the stockholders would pay no more assessments, that no more money could be borrowed, that the company could send no further aid, and that he (the superintendent) must depend entirely upon the mines for resources to pay the debts and expenses of the company and protect the property.

Ten months before the final abandonment of the mines the company in New York had been informed by its agent at the mines of the poor quality of the ores, and that it had been greatly deceived as to the value of the mines. Before the abandonment of the mines the superintendent wrote several letters to the treasurer and managing agent in New York informing him that the ores would not pay to reduce, and that, unless money was sent from New York, he would be compelled to abandon the property. And, finally, after his urgent appeals for money had been refused, being without means to meet expenses and greatly embarrassed by the debts of the company, he voluntarily left the mines in charge of his assistant and went without molestation to New York to endeavor to secure aid from the directors of the company. A meeting of the directors was called, at which Exall made his report, after which the whole enterprise was abandoned and came to an end. The treasurer and managing director testified before the committee that there was at that time no intention to present a claim against Mexico.

The company filed the annual report required by the incorporations laws of New York, January 20, 1868, and no further annual report was filed until January 20, 1877, being the January following the final decision of the umpire upon the award.

Witnesses from the immediate locality of the mines formerly owned by La Abra Company appeared before the committee and testified that since their abandonment by La Abra Company they have been lying idle the greater part of the time, and have been open to denouncement under the Mexican mining laws by any person who chose to work them; that some of them have been denounced and worked for short intervals, but always with unprofitable results, and that they produce such a low grade of ore that it does not pay to work them.

As to the alleged hostile acts of the Mexican authorities and people: The claimant's memorial, besides charging various specific acts, contains general charges of acts of violence, persecutions, and outrages by the Mexican authorities and people, which are alleged to so have alarmed the employés of the company and to have so interfered with the working of the mines that it became necessary to abandon them. If these allegations had any foundation in fact, some statements would undoubtedly be found in the letter book and letters constituting the correspondence between the superintendent at the mines and the company's agents in New York to sustain them; on the contrary, this correspondence shows that from the very beginning of the company's operations it was specially favored by the authorities. Bartholow, the first superintendent, reported to the New York office in a letter, a copy of which is found in the press copy book, that owing to the war between the Mexican Republic and the French, and the consequent interruption of business, he would not have been able to secure the transportation of the machinery and supplies except for the military protection and permits granted him by the Republican authorities. He also, as it appears, resorted to the expedient of placing the hired mule trains in charge of Americans to secure their exemption from impressment.

Prorogues of special privileges and waivers of forfeitures, as to the working of the mines, were several times granted to the company by the authorities during the period covered by its operations. Suits instituted in the courts to protect the company's titles and rights were decided in its favor. Special indulgence was shown to the company respecting the exhibition and record of its title. The letters of the superintendents found in the letter book show conclusively that whatever difficulties occurred with the officials arose mainly from the inability of the company to meet its financial obligations. The superintendent wrote to the New York office October 6, 1867:

"There is no difficulty about the authorities, boundaries, or anything else concerning the mines or hacienda, provided there is money on hand, and money must be sent."

One of the specific acts alleged to establish the charge of hostility on the part of the Mexican authorities is the imprisonment of the superintendent, Exall. In his deposition before the Commission Exall states that he was arrested by the local judge; that without any form of trial or knowledge of his offense he was sentenced to two months' imprisonment, fined $50, and thurst into prison.

In a letter which Exall wrote to the prefect at San Dimas, the official superior of the local judge, a copy of which is found in the letter book, all the details as to the causes of the arrest are set forth. His own account as there given contradicts his deposition, and shows that his detention must have been of a trivial character. The evidence does not show that he was actually imprisoned. It was an arrest under which he was detained for an hour or so, and was not of sufficient consequence to be mentioned in his correspondence with the New York office, and does not appear to have interfered with his duties as superintendent.

The action of the local officials, Mora and Soto, is relied upon by the claimants to establish interference by the authorities in the working of the mines, and their orders to the superintendent were produced before the Commission. These orders show upon their face that they were occasioned by an alleged failure of the superintendent to observe his contract with the miners, by which they were to be paid two-thirds of their wages in goods from the company's store and one-third in cash. The failure to make the cash payment led to the interference of the local magistrate, which was authorized by the Mexican mining laws.

The last of the orders or letters of the judge to the superintendent is dated July 10, 1867. In the letter book is found the answer of Superintendent Exall, dated July 11, showing that he was at fault in the matter in controversy, and that he had made a peaceable and satisfactory arrangement with the workmen. He closed his letter by expressing the hope "that with this there may be the most friendly understanding about this affair." The matter was reported to the treasurer in New York in a letter by Exall, dated July 13, in which he describes it as "a little spat with the officials which was gotten through without much trouble," adding, referring to the workmen, "we can do better with them when they are a little hungry." Subsequent letters from Exall to the New York office show that the company remained in quiet possession of the mines for at least one year after these orders, and that they had no influence in bringing about the abandonment of the property.

Another allegation to show the hostility to the company is that large quantities of ores were carried off by force. The company in its memorial to the Commission averred that—

"Large quantities of ore were taken, * * * the employé being deterred by threats from resisting such spoliation."

And this is supported by Exall and others, who assert that the ores taken by the Mexicans were very rich. The statements on this point are very general, no dates or names of parties being given. The letter-book, which evidently contains a minute account of everything of importance that occurred at the mines, does not contain a reference to a single event of this character. On the contrary, the letters it contains show that the miners and the people were peaceable and easily controlled, and gave the company no trouble, and this is confirmed by witnesses who testified before the committee. There was no incentive to steal the ores, as it is shown that the ores taken from the mines were so poor that it would not pay to reduce them.

Another specification in the claimants' memorial is that "the authorities repeatedly seized mule trains of the company loaded with provisions, and appropriated the same to their use." The superintendents—Bartholow and Exall—in their depositions before the Commission swore that the company owned large trains of mules engaged in transporting its machinery and supplies from Mazatlan, the seaport, to the mines, and that these trains were repeatedly seized and confiscated by the Mexican troops. One witness estimates the company's losses on this account at from $75,000 to $100,000, and another at $25,000. But there are only two seizures which are specified with any certainty by the witnesses before the joint commission—the one when George Scott, an employé, was robbed of $1,200, and the other when William Grove was murdered.

It appears from the letters, copies of which are found in the testimony of witnesses taken before the committee, that the company never owned any mule trains, but that all its transportation was conducted by hiring mule trains owned by Mexicans. When Bartholow, the first superintendent, turned over the mines and property to his successor, the company only possessed twelve mules. A minute account of the robbery of Scott and the murder of Grove is contained in a letter found in the letter-book, from Superintendent Bartholow to the treasurer of the company in New York, from which it appears that they were both traveling alone, and neither had charge of or was in company with mule trains, and nowhere in the whole correspondence is any reference made to the loss of any mule train owned by the company.

The murder of Grove is thus described in the claimant's memorial:

"Things finally got to such a pass that one of the personnel of the company, in charge of one of its trains, was openly killed by the Liberal forces and the train seized, and that was made boast of by Mexican officials," etc.

This murder was reported by the superintendent to the New York office, with all the detailed circumstances attending it, in two letters, dated March 7 and April 10, 1866, copies of which are found in the letter book. In these letters it is stated that Grove was traveling alone; that he lost his life by his own imprudence in revealing the fact that he had in his possession a large sum of money; that he was killed by one of the company's own employés, and that the authorities arrested, tried, and executed the murderer with commendable promptness.

Prominence was given by the claimants before the Commission to a forced loan of $1,200, alleged to have been collected by a Mexican, Col. Valdespino, from Col. De Lagnel when he was superintendent, and it was also charged that $3,000 or $4,000 of illegal taxes were exacted while Bartholow was superintendent. The full correspondence of Bartholow with the Mexican tax-collector and Gen. Corona is found in the letter book, and in inclosing copies to the treasurer in New York he says:

"The result was, instead of paying the amount of $3,000 or $4,000, as was demanded, we only paid about $30."

The facts as to the forced loan of $1,200 are also fully set forth in the copies found in the letter book. Colonel De Lagnel, the superintendent, wrote the day after he received the notice, July 28, 1866, to the military commander, Valdespino, and also to the prefect of the town, remonstrating against the levy, and informed them that he had no money with which to pay it, and sent, for the use of the soldiers, four pieces of cotton cloth as a token of good will; and that was the end of the affair.

Colonel De Lagnel was examined as a witness before the committee upon this subject and confirmed the statement concerning the matter appearing in the correspondence in the letter book.

The foregoing review of the testimony shows that every material allegation made by the La Abra Company before the Mixed Commission tending to fix the responsibility upon the Mexican Government for the abandonment of its property in Mexico is disproved by the testimony taken by the committee.

The assertion of the claimants that the letter book and original letters of the officers and agents of La Abra Company were in possession of Mexico, and might have been produced at the trial before the Commission, is not proved. Col. De Lagnel, one of the superintendents at the mines, testified before the committee that the letter book was left at the mines with the other books and papers of the company when he transferred the charge of affairs to Exall, the superintendent who succeeded him. Exall's letters, after he left the mines and went to New York, show that the books and papers were placed in charge of Granger, his assistant. Two years after the abandonment Granger produced and delivered to the agent of the company sent out to Mexico to collect testimony to establish its claim, the only original records or papers of the company ever filed by it before the Claims Commission, and these papers Granger declared, in his deposition before the Commission, came into his possession as clerk of the company, and had not up to that date (May 14, 1870) passed out of his possession. The Mexican minister has stated to Secretary Bayard, in an official communication, that the letter book of La Abra Company and the original letters of the treasurer, Garth, and of the superintendent, Exall, were delivered by Granger to the Mexican Government in December, 1877, or two years after the award had been rendered.

It has already been stated that $240,683.06, being five installments on La Abra award, have been paid by the Department of State to the claimants. The president and treasurer of the company testified before the committee that the whole of this sum has been consumed in paying the expenses of prosecuting the claim, and that the stockholders of the company have as yet received nothing, nor has anything been paid on the indebtedness of the company. It also appears from their testimony that a considerable proportion of the installments not yet distributed would be required to discharge the obligations incurred in the prosecution of the claim.

In the opinion of the committee, if the testimony were far less satisfactory than it is to show the fraudulent character of La Abra award, and were sufficient only to create grave doubts as to the substantial integrity of the claim and render it probable that a judicial investigation would establish its fraudulent character, the honor of the United States would require a further judicial investigation of the claim by this Government.

This brings us to a consideration of the second question involved in this measure, which is, Has Congress power to reopen the award?

If it shall be judicially determined in the suit authorized by the bill under consideration to be brought that the award made by the Mixed Commission in respect of the claim of La Abra Company was obtained by fraud and false swearing, what will be the duty of the United States Government in regard to the payments to become due from the Government of Mexico and the money which has heretofore been paid by that Government on account of said award and not heretofore distributed to the claimants?

There can be but one answer to this question. It is, if Congress has the power to do so, to release the Mexican Government from the payment of future installments and to return to that Government the money still under control of this Government.

As to the power of Congress to reopen La Abra award, it is clear from the decision of the umpire, Sir Edward Thornton, in La Abra and Weil awards, that he took it for granted that power existed in the Government of the United States to set aside the award or relieve Mexico from the results of fraud or perjury if they should thereafter be shown to have been practiced by the Commission. The following is quoted from his decisions:

"In the case No. 477, "Benj. Weil vs. Mexico," the agent of Mexico has produced circumstantial evidence which, if not refuted by the claimant, would certainly contribute to the suspicion that perjury has been committed, and that the whole claim is a fraud. For the reason already given, it is not in the power of the umpire to take that evidence into consideration, but if perjury shall be proved hereafter no one would rejoice more than the umpire himself that his decision should be reversed, and that justice should be done."

And in referring to the newly discovered evidence in La Abra claim, Sir Edward said:

"He (the umpire) doubts whether the Government of either (country) would insist upon the payment of claims founded upon perjury." (H. Ex. Doc. 103, 48th Cong., 1st sess., p. 128.)

In the case of La Abra Company vs. Frelinghuysen (110 U. S.) the Supreme Court discusses the question of the finality of the award and the power of the Government (so long as the money is within its control) to inquire into the integrity of the claim as between itself and the claimants, its own citizens. Chief Justice Waite, in delivering the opinion of the court, held:

"There is no doubt that the provisions of the convention (of 1868) as to the conclusiveness of the awards are as strong as language can make them. * * * But this is to be construed as language used in a compact of two nations 'for the adjustment of the claims of the citizens of either * * * against the other,' entered into 'to increase the friendly feeling between' republics, and 'so to strengthen the system and principles of republican government on the American continent.' No nation treats with a citizen of another nation except through his government. The treaty, when made, represents a compact between the governments, and each government holds the other responsible for everything done by their respective citizens under it. The citizens of the United States having claims against Mexico were not parties to this convention. * * * The presentation by a citizen of a fraudulent claim or false testimony for reference to the Commission was an imposition on his own Government, and if that Government afterwards discovered that it had in this way been made an instrument of wrong towards a friendly power it would be not only its right, but its duty, to repudiate the act and make reparation as far as possible for the consequences of its neglect, if any there had been.

"International arbitration must always proceed on the principles of national honor and integrity. Claims presented and evidence submitted to such a tribunal must necessarily bear the impress of the entire good faith of the Government from which they come, and it is not to be presumed that any Government will for a moment allow itself knowingly to be made the instrument of wrong in any such proceeding. No technical rules of pleading, as applied in municipal courts, ought ever to be allowed to stand in the way of the national power to do what is right under all circumstances. * * * The United States, when they assumed the responsibility of presenting the claims of their citizens to Mexico for payment, entered into no contract obligations with the claimants to assume their frauds and to collect on their account all that, by their imposition of false testimony, might be given in the awards of the Commission. As between the United States and the claimants, the honesty of the claims is always open to inquiry for the purpose of fair dealing with the Government against which, through the United States, a claim has been made."

An examination of the action of Congress respecting claims adjudicated by virtue of international conventions will show that Congress has not regarded awards rendered on such claims as final and beyond its control. Within the last thirty years our Government has repeatedly reopened awards of this character, which have been rendered in accordance with the provisions of conventions containing stipulations making them final and conclusive between the parties to the convention. To quote counsel:

"To accomplish the annulment or revision of the awards, almost every method of procedure known to modern jurisprudence or diplomatic practice has been resorted to by our Government to protect the honor of the nation or do justice to claimants. These procedures may be classified as follows:

"First. By a resubmission of the cases on which awards had been rendered to a new international commission, as under the conventions with Colombia and Venezuela.

"Second. By an independent resort, through bills in equity, to the established domestic tribunals of the country, as in the Gardiner case under the treaty with Mexico of 1848, or in the Lazare case under the agreement with Haiti of 1884.

"Third. By resubmission, through an act of Congress, to a special tribunal, as the Court of Claims, in the Atocha case under the Mexican treaty of 1848, or the 'Caldera' case under the Chinese convention of 1858.

"Fourth. By reference, through an act of Congress, to the Executive, clothing the Attorney-General with quasi judicial functions, as in the case of Nott & Co., under the Chinese treaty of 1858.

"Fifth. By a direct return of the money to the foreign government by the independent action of the Secretary of State and by act of Congress, without any judicial reëxamination or any hearing afforded the claimant, as in the 'Caroline' case."

This committee, in its report made at the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress upon the bill (S. 2297) relating to the Benjamin Weil claim, discussing the power of Congress to reopen the award in that case, said:

"The Committee on Foreign Relations are satisfied that there is no impediment of law or policy in the way of Congress to prevent the full examination of this award to Benjamin Weil in our own courts, and that the evidence presented to Congress to impeach the claim, both as to fraud and perjury, is of so convincing a nature as to make it our duty to our own country to require that this should be done.

"The method of procedure contemplated by the bill reported by the committee is sustained by a clear precedent in the legislative and judicial records of the country, known as the Gardiner case. By the treaty of 1848 the United States released Mexico from all claims of American citizens and assumed their payment to an amount not exceeding $3,250,000, and provided, by article 15, that 'a board of commissioners shall be established by the Government of the United States, whose awards shall be final and conclusive.' Before this commission George A. Gardiner obtained an award for $428,750, which amount was paid to him or his assignees May 16, 1851. Soon after the payment of the award charges began to be made that the claim was fraudulent, and these having been brought to the attention of both Houses of Congress, the Senate, on the 26th of February, 1852, appointed a committee to investigate the same, with power to send for persons and papers; and the House also appointed a like committee August 24, 1852.

"The Senate committee at once proceeded to a thorough examination of the fraud, sent a special commission to Mexico, brought before its own body a large number of witnesses, and after two years' investigation, in which it was established that the award had been obtained by forged documents and false swearing, the committee made its final report to the Senate March 28, 1854. On March 6, 1854, a resolution was adopted by the House, directing the Judiciary Committee to inquire into the propriety of taking legal proceedings to recover the money paid on the award; and, August 3, 1854, this committee submitted a resolution, which was adopted, requesting the President 'to institute proceedings in law or equity against all such agents, attorneys, and confederates as may have assisted in prosecuting 'Gardiner's claim,' in order to test their liability to refund the amounts paid them * * * out of the award made by said commissioners to said Gardiner.'

"Meanwhile, however, the fraud had been made so apparent by the investigation set on foot by the Senate that the Law Department of the Government had taken action without waiting for the request of the legislative branch. Gardiner was arrested and finally sentenced to ten years' imprisonment, but committed suicide soon after conviction. Bills were filed against Gardiner and his bankers, in whose hands some of the funds were found, in the United States circuit courts in Washington and New York; injunctions obtained in July, 1852, and decrees rendered in favor of the United States March 29, 1856, in Washington, and June 14, 1859, in New York, to the effect 'that said award be, and the same is hereby, in all things reversed and annulled.' On these decrees some $250,000 were recovered and paid back into the Treasury. It does not appear that the treaty stipulation as to the 'final and conclusive' character of the awards was at any time interposed as an objection to the action of Congress or the judicial proceedings. On the contrary, the fraud being made public, all branches of the Government—the legislative, the executive, and the courts—exerted all their powers to bring Gardiner to justice and to recover the money paid on his fraudulent claim."

The House Committee on Foreign Affairs, in a report made by Representative (now Senator) DANIEL, at the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress, upon the bill (H. R. 8122) concerning La Abra claim, and similar in its provisions to the bill under consideration, although reporting against the bill, maintained the power of Congress to reopen the award, as follows:

HAS CONGRESS THE CONSTITUTIONAL POWER TO REOPEN THE AWARD AND ORDER A NEW TRIAL.

"We have no doubt that Congress may waive the benefits of the treaty with Mexico and reopen the case decided in favor of La Abra Company. Sir Edward Thornton took such power for granted as an attribute of our national sovereignty. The existence of such power is sustained by a number of precedents, and to a certain extent it has already been exercised by Congress in the act of 1878 suspending payment of the sums awarded, and of which the present bill is amendatory. The President assumes and the Secretary of State asserts it, and in Key vs. Frelinghuysen, the Supreme Court affirmed it."

The minority of the committee, who reported in favor of the passage of the bill, upon this question said:

"We hold that an examination of the legislative and diplomatic history of this country will show that the United States, both in its dealings with other Governments and its own citizens, has never regarded the awards of commissions or final adjudications of claims as irrevocable where the honor of the nation was involved, and in many cases they have been set aside on behalf of claimants. One of the best known is that of the Venezuela Claims Commission, respecting which Congress has repeatedly taken action, and where only recently the whole work of the Commission was annulled on the express recommendation of Congress. The awards under the Mexican treaty of 1848 were twice set aside, once by the courts in the Gardiner claim and once by direct act of Congress in the Atocha claim. (13 Stat., 595; 16 Stat., 633.) In the interest of rejected claimants Congress reopened two of the awards of the Commission under Chinese claims treaty of 1858. (15 Stat., 440; 20 Stat., 171.) In the case of the Caroline the Secretary of State returned to Brazil money which had been paid after a diplomatic settlement, against the protest of the claimant, and Congress appropriated a large sum to reimburse Brazil for moneys paid the United States representative, but which never reached the Treasury. (18 Stat., 70.)

"In the present case there is a concurrence of sentiment on the part of the three departments of the Government—legislative, executive, and judicial—as to the power to legislate on the subject. The jurisdiction to legislate respecting the awards of an international tribunal was fully discussed in Congress when the act of June 18, 1878, suspending the distribution of the Weil and La Abra awards, was pending. It will be seen by reference to the speeches of Hon. Benjamin Wilson, member of Congress from West Virginia, now Assistant Attorney-General, and others (CONG. RECORD, vol. 7, part 4, pp. 4104-'5-'6), that the arguments and citations now made use of by the claimants were then urged upon the House. Notwithstanding it was then contended that Congress had no jurisdiction to legislate respecting a retrial of these cases, the act of June 18, 1878, was passed, requesting the President to investigate the charges of fraud, and providing that 'the said present awards shall be set aside, modified, or affirmed, as may be determined on said retrial.' Congress, by the passage of that act, assumed full authority to control these awards, even to the extent of providing that, in the contingency of no retrial being had, the President should have the power to withhold the money 'until Congress shall otherwise direct;' thereby reserving to itself the duty of finally determining what disposition should be made of the money paid by Mexico on these awards.

"President Hayes and Secretary Evarts held that Congress had 'plenary authority in the matter.' In accordance with the act of 1878, Secretary Evarts examined the evidence of fraud in the Weil and La Abra cases as submitted to him by Mexico, and he found 'that the honor of the United States does require that these two cases should be further investigated by the United States.' But he said: 'The authority for such an investigation must proceed from Congress. I would advise, therefore, that the proofs and the conclusions you [the President] shall come to thereon, if adverse to the immediate payment on these awards of the installments received from Mexico, be laid before Congress for the exercise of their plenary authority in the matter.' And President Hayes thereupon transmitted Secretary Evarts's recommendation to Congress for their action. (See Message, H. Ex. Doc. 103, p. 740.)

"President Cleveland and Secretary Bayard have clearly assumed that in the present status of the cases Congress has power to legislate in respect to them. Secretary Bayard, in his communication to the President of May 6 last, after reciting the history of the Weil and La Abra claims, says: 'It is within the province of the legislative branch of this Government now to renew the history of the proceedings, legislative, executive, and judicial, connected with the two claims.' And he closes as follows: 'I suggest that the attention of Congress should be earnestly invoked to the consideration of the present status of these claims referred to, and the duty of the Executive under an existing treaty, to which the force and effect of paramount law is given by the Constitution in the event of the adjournment of the two Houses without further action in reference thereto." (H. Ex. Doc. 274, p. 284). And in accordance with the suggestion of the Secretary of State the President submitted the subject to Congress by his message of May 11 last. (Doc. 274, p. 280.)

"There can be no significance whatever in the President's message and the Secretary's letter if Congress is not clothed with power to legislate upon this subject.

"But the Supreme Court has removed all doubt upon this point in its decision in the cases of Key vs. Frelinghuysen (Doc. 274, pp. 171-5). The Chief Justice, in referring to the request of Secretary Evarts to Congress for legislation to enable him to pursue the investigation of the cases, says:

"'The report of Mr. Evarts can not be read without leaving the conviction that if the means had been afforded, the inquiries which Congress asked for would have been further prosecuted.'

"This plainly implied the power of Congress to act upon the request. But the court is still more explicit, as follows:

"'The presentation by a citizen of a fraudulent claim or false testimony for reference to the Commission was an imposition on his own Government, and if that Government afterward discovered that it had in this way been made an instrument of wrong toward a friendly power, it would be not only its right, but its duty, to repudiate the act and make reparation as far as possible for the consequences of its neglect, if any there had been. International arbitration must always proceed on the principles of national honor and integrity. Claims presented and evidence submitted to such a tribunal must necessarily bear the impress of the entire good faith of the Government from which they come, and it is not to be presumed that any Government will for a moment allow itself knowingly to be made the instrument of wrong in any such proceedings. No technical rules of pleading as applied in municipal courts ought ever to be allowed to stand in the way of the national power to do what is right under all the circumstances. Every citizen who asks the intervention of his own Government against another for the redress of his personal grievances must necessarily subject himself and his claim to these requirements of international comity.

* * * * * * *

"'The United States when they assumed the responsibility of presenting the claims of their citizens to Mexico for payment, entered into no contract obligations with the claimants to assume their frauds and to collect on their account all that, by their imposition of false testimony, might be given in the awards of the Commission. As between the United States and the claimants, the honesty of the claims is always open to inquiry for the purposes of fair dealing with the Government against which, through the United States, a claim has been made.'

"From this review it is indisputably established that Congress has full power to legislate upon the subject."

It thus appears that the power of Congress to reopen La Abra award and to direct a suit to be brought to judicially determine whether or not it was procured by fraud has been affirmed by successive Secretaries of State, assumed by Congress in the passage of the act of June 18, 1878, expressly declared by committees of both Houses of Congress, and substantially held to exist by the highest judicial tribunal of this Government.

The committee are of the opinion that Congress has power to do what is proposed to be done by the bill under consideration, and recommend its passage with amendments.

Mr. VEST. Would it suit the Senator from Oregon that this measure should be made the special order for Monday a week?

Mr. DOLPH. I greatly fear there will be something else to occupy the attention of the Senate at that time. If it can be agreed by unanimous consent that the bill shall be the order of business and proceeded with a week from Monday, I should be inclined to consent to it, as I do not wish to discommode anybody.

Mr. MORGAN. At the close of the morning business?

Mr. DOLPH. At the close of the morning business. I would not care to have it made a special order, for then it would be displaced by anything that might come over as unfinished business.

Mr. VEST. I do not care in what way the arrangement is made.

Mr. MORGAN. I suggest that at the conclusion of the morning business a week from next Monday the bill be made the regular order, to be taken up and disposed of.

Mr. VEST. That would suit me very well.

Mr. MORGAN. We can unanimously agree to that.

Mr. HARRIS. Is it the intention of the Senate that the bill shall take precedence of any unfinished business at that time? If so, it had better be clearly expressed, because the unfinished business would take precedence of any special order, and such an understanding would only make it a special order for that hour of that day.

Mr. MORGAN. I had that in my mind, that it should take precedence of any business of that kind which would come over from Saturday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the request of the Senator from Oregon, that by unanimous consent the bill referred to be made the special order for Monday a week.

Mr. HARRIS. Taking precedence of any special order or any unfinished business at that time?

Mr. MORGAN. If the Chair will allow me, let it be made the order of business for a week from Monday after the conclusion of the routine morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request that the bill be taken up a week from Monday, after the conclusion of the morning business, taking precedence of any other special order or unfinished business? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered. What is the further pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. VEST. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 11, 1892, at 12 o'clock meridian.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The reference of matters on the Speaker's table being now completed, the Chair will resume the call of States for the introduction of bills. The call rests with the State of Ohio.

ADJOURNMENT TILL MONDAY.

Mr. SPRINGER. Before the call of States is resumed I desire to move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The question being put,

The SPEAKER pro tempore said: The ayes seem to have it.

Several members called for a division.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Is it proposed that the call of States be completed before the adjournment to-day?

Mr. SPRINGER. Oh, yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that, as he is informed, it will be within the power of the House to complete to-day the call of States for the introduction of bills.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Then I do not insist on a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 127, noes 34.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The ayes have it.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Is there a quorum?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No quorum has voted. Does the gentleman make that point?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order that no quorum has voted; and the Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR].

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 144, noes 27.

So the motion of Mr. SPRINGER was agreed to.

INDEX OF CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to offer a resolution which is privileged in its character.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution submitted by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON].

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Joint Committee on Printing be, and is hereby, ordered to examine into the errors in the index to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the present session of Congress and, if possible to do so, to take such steps as will in the future remedy the defects and correct the errors therein.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I only want to be heard, Mr. Speaker, briefly in behalf of the resolution.

Mr. ENLOE. Is this resolution before the House for consideration?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee introduced the resolution as a privileged matter for present consideration.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Is it reported from the Committee on Printing?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No, sir; it has never been referred to the committee. But I do not think that any gentleman will object to it when a brief statement is made in regard to it.

Mr. ENLOE. I reserve all points of order upon it until I hear what it is.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is privileged inasmuch as it affects the dignity of this House and the members in their representative capacity, as will appear if gentlemen will observe the reading of the resolution and then permit me to make a few brief words of explanation.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask if the Chair has ruled that this resolution presents a privileged matter?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has not yet ruled upon it.

Mr. McCREARY. Personally I am in favor of considering the resolution; but I do not think it a privileged matter. I would like to hear the explanation of the gentleman from Tennessee on that point.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will endeavor to make one which will be satisfactory to gentlemen. I ask for the reading of Rule IX, rules of the Fiftieth Congress, by the Clerk.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Rule IX of what Congress?

Mr. McCREARY. Let me ask if Rule IX has been adopted by this House?

Mr RICHARDSON. No, sir; it has not been; but I will make my remarks based upon that rule as soon as it shall be read by the Clerk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the rule to which the gentleman from Tennessee refers.

Mr. ENLOE. I want to have the call of States and Territories continued, and as this matter does not on its face present a question of privilege, I demand the regular order.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I make the point of order that this should go to the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will again state that the gentleman from Tennessee rose in his place and stated that he proposed to offer a privileged resolution, with which statement, of course, he is entitled to recognition. The resolution has been read in the hearing of the House, and he now seeks to have read the rule of practice under which such resolutions have been heretofore held to be privileged.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. But he also states that he introduces it himself; that it has not been referred to the committee or reported from the Committee on Printing.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It has not been.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Then I submit that it should first go to the committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have the floor, Mr. Speaker, on the question, and I do not yield to the gentleman from Iowa for the present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Tennessee on the question of privilege.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire briefly to explain the reason for offering the resolution. I do not believe that any gentleman will make the slightest objection as soon as he hears the explanation I shall make.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the resolution will be again reported.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And then let Rule IX be read in connection with it.

The Clerk again reported the resolution.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now let Rule IX be read.

Mr. BOUTELLE. What rule is that?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Rule IX of the Fiftieth and also of the Fifty-first Congress, in relation to questions of privilege.

Mr. BOUTELLE. These rules, I believe, have not been adopted?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. They have not been.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I only ask that it be read for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Questions of privilege shall be, first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings; second, the rights, reputation, and conduct of members individually in their representative capacity only; and shall have precedence of all other questions except motions to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, to adjourn, and for a recess.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The errors to which the resolution refers in the index to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD are simply these, the compiler of the index has utterly failed to mention the names of seven of the ten members from the State of Tennessee who were present on the first day of this session, and who were sworn in as members of this House. The gentleman from Iowa himself [Mr. HENDERSON], and I call the gentleman's name because he has interrupted me, does not appear in this index.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I am aware of that.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY], who also interrupted me, does not appear in this index; the name of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas does not appear, and I might cite a hundred, I think, which have been omitted from the index.

Mr. HEARD. Here is another.

Mr. RICHARDSON. This being the case, these inaccuracies existing in the index, I undertake to say that this does affect the integrity of the proceedings of this House, the rights and privileges of the members, and is therefore a privileged matter. The resolution directs the Joint Committee on Printing to investigate as to the facts and take such steps as may be necessary to have the inaccuracies corrected.

I want to say that the Printing Office and the Public Printer are not responsible for these errors. This index is compiled by a gentleman appointed by the Joint Committee on Printing, and he is paid by the Public Printer. Therefore, no blame is to be attached to the Public Printer or the Government Printing Office. I do not say that anybody is to blame; but I say that the errors exist, and this investigation should be had with a view to making the proper corrections.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. I would like to ask the gentleman a question right on that line.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield for a question.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. Has the gentleman taken any pains to investigate as to whether the RECORD itself is a full and complete record of all the business transacted here? I ask the question for this reason: Early in the session I introduced a number of petitions which did not appear in the RECORD; and on yesterday I introduced a number of private bills in the way it was indicated by the action of the House they should be introduced, and they do not appear in the RECORD.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I will say to the gentleman that the file clerks have not had time to properly index them yet, on account of the great number of them. It is no delay.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want to say that this resolution which I have offered does not cover errors in the RECORD, of which he speaks. If the gentleman imagines that errors have been created in that way he can introduce a resolution upon that point; but this resolution does not affect that question. It simply relates to the indexing of the RECORD.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. There is no imagination about it. It is a plain fact of omission.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now I will move the previous question, unless some gentleman desires to debate the matter.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will withdraw the demand for the previous question if the gentleman from Iowa wishes to make any remarks upon the resolution.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I reserved the point of order that this resolution must go to a committee, and that point has not been ruled on. I am going to insist upon that point of order, and I feel that I have all the better right, since I was one of the gentlemen whose names were omitted. How in the world any index clerk could omit the name of HENDERSON of Iowa, I do not understand. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. With such an admirable voice and clear head as the gentleman has, it is certain that he has not spoken, or the omission would not have occurred.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. It shows that there are some grave blunders in the business, so grave that I want it to go through the regular course and go to a committee. I am not suffering so much but that I can wait until it goes through the regular channels, especially if it is to go to a committee of which my friend from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] is chairman. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I insist upon my point of order that this should go to a committee first.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, if the question is privileged we have a right to consider it now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the pending question before the House——

Mr. RICHARDSON. The question of order is first.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is the custom of the House to keep a Journal of its proceedings and also a RECORD, setting forth the proceedings more fully than they are set forth in the Journal. The Chair thinks that whatever affects its integrity, if it has omissions, is a question of privilege. Being admitted for consideration as a question of privilege, it will be for the House to determine whether in its consideration it ought to be referred to a committee; but the Chair thinks that under the usual practice of the House all questions affecting the integrity of the RECORD are privileged. Members are recognized frequently as a question of privilege to correct it. The Chair thinks it will be in order to look into this question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, the resolution now being in order, I ask for a vote upon it, and move the previous question upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will withdraw the demand for the previous question if the gentleman from Iowa desires to speak upon the resolution.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Is it now in order, without rules, to move that this go to a committee?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Tennessee withdraw his demand for the previous question?

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the gentleman from Iowa wishes to make any remarks on the resolution, I do.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. No; I want to move the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The joint committee, I may say, meets to-morrow, and I thought it better to pass this resolution, as it is a concurrent one, so that it can go to the Senate. It ought to be considered to day, so that it may go to the Senate for its concurrence.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Iowa that under the practice of the House it is in order, either before or after the previous question is ordered, to move the reference of a resolution to a committee. Does the gentleman make that motion?

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. There are so many members anxious to get to the call of the States that I will not handicap it with any motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was then agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. ENLOE. I rise to call attention to the fact, while we are on the subject of the RECORD, that there has not been a single private bill introduced here printed in the RECORD. I would like to inquire why it has not been done, so that gentlemen can get their bills printed and before the proper committees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk informs the Chair that upon the first day of the introduction of bills there was so large a number introduced that it was impossible to get all properly indexed and ready for the RECORD, and that is the explanation of it, and that they will appear as soon as that can be done.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I will say, if the House will indulge me, that this is not at all unusual. It occurred at the last session of Congress, and will occur again. When so many bills are presented at one time, it takes considerable time to get them in order and have their titles published in the RECORD. The delay is not unusual.

CALL OF STATES FOR THE INTRODUCTION OF BILLS.

The call of States and Territories was then resumed; when bills and joint resolutions were severally introduced, read twice, ordered to be printed, and referred to the committees named below:

COMPENSATION OF REGISTERS OF LAND OFFICES, ETC.

By Mr. HERMANN: A bill (H. R. 353) to regulate and fix the compensation of registers of the land office and receivers of public moneys in each land district—to the Committee on Appropriations.

Subsequently

Mr. HERRMAN said: Mr. Speaker, I submit that probably an erroneous reference has been made of the bill to regulate and fix the compensation of registers of the land office and receivers of public moneys in each land district. That bill has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and I think it should have been referred to the Committee on Public Lands, inasmuch as it does not involve an appropriation, but simply changes the land laws as to the salaries of officers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair was under the impression that it involved an appropriation, but will examine the bill and correct the reference if it was erroneous. [After a pause]. The Clerk will report the title of the bill to which the Chair supposes the gentlemen from Oregon refers.

The title of the bill was again reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is that the bill to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. HERMANN. Yes, Mr. Speaker, and the Chair will observe that it does not involve an appropriation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will ask the gentleman if it fixes certain salaries in lieu of salaries now existing?

Mr. HERMANN. It involves changes in the existing law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will ask the gentleman if some of the salaries to be fixed are to be higher than existing salaries?

Mr. HERMANN. In some cases it does fix them at a higher rate, but the object of the bill is to equalize the compensation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks it is a matter that properly goes to the Committee on Appropriations, because that committee has heretofore had the question of making appropriations for that branch of the service, and therefore the Chair thinks the reference is correct.

Mr. HERMANN. I have no objection to that reference. I simply called attention to it, thinking it was erroneous.

LIFE-SAVING STATION AT TILLAMOOK BAY, OREGON.

By Mr. HERMANN: A bill (H. R. 354) providing for a life-saving station at the entrance to Tillamook Bay, in Oregon, and for life-saving crew, etc.—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

FAMINE IN RUSSIA.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday the House, on motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], postponed indefinitely Senate resolution No. 21, authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to transport contributions for the relief of the suffering poor of Russia. I desire now to give notice that hereafter I shall make a motion to reconsider the vote by which that joint resolution was indefinitely postponed.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think that motion ought to be entered now.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Illinois thinks so; I do not. If the Chair so decides, however, I will enter the motion.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Does the Chair think that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], having voted against the motion to postpone, has a right to make the motion to reconsider?

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Kentucky was here yesterday and ought to know.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state, in response to the inquiry of the gentleman from Kentucky, that the final vote, which the gentleman from Georgia moved to reconsider, was not a yea-and-nay vote, and therefore any member of the House can move to reconsider it.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I have no doubt the decision of the Chair would be entirely accurate if the rules of any former House had been adopted, but I doubt whether it is so in the absence of rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks this has been the practice of the House; a practice so long established and followed that it is a safe guide in this matter.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I think the Chair would be entirely accurate as to any other gentleman except the gentleman from Georgia, because the rule is founded upon this reason: that where there is no record of a vote the gentleman offering to make the motion can not be shown not to have voted in the affirmative; but in this case the Journal and the RECORD will show that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] did ask for tellers in opposition to the motion, so that he is on record as having opposed it. Now, no other gentleman is so on record, and therefore the reason of the rule does not apply to anybody but the gentleman from Georgia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not remember any instance in which such a distinction has been drawn, and thinks that the rule and practice have been to allow any member to move a reconsideration in such cases. However, the gentleman from Kentucky can reserve the point of order if he desires.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I have no objection to the motion to reconsider; indeed, I would be willing to enter it myself. But I did not wish the gentleman from Georgia to appear upon the record in an inconsistent position. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I should like the opinion of the Chair as to whether the notice I have given is sufficient, or whether the motion ought to be made now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the usual custom is to enter the motion, and it can be called up at any time.

Mr. BLOUNT. Very well. Then I make the motion to reconsider, to be called up hereafter.

Mr. KILGORE. And I move to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will first state the proposition. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] enters a motion to reconsider, and gives notice that he will ask for action upon it at a future time.

Mr. KILGORE. I do not think the gentleman making the motion to reconsider can control the action of other members who are not parties to it, and the motion to lay on the table is in order at any time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that if the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] insists upon that motion and present consideration of the question, it is in order.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, such has never been the practice of the House. I have not made the motion to be entertained now, and it will not be entertained at this time. When the House comes to consider my motion, then the motion of the gentleman from Texas will be in order. But the practice of the House has been——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that while the custom has been to act upon such a motion at the time when the gentleman making it may see fit to call it up, still there is a right on the part of any member, whenever the motion is made, to insist on consideration and move to lay it on the table.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Did the gentleman enter the motion to reconsider, or did he simply give notice of such a motion.

Mr. BLOUNT. I did both.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I understand, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] is willing that both motions shall go over.

Mr. KILGORE. Yes, sir; I have no objection to permitting both motions to go over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas will accomplish his object in that way. His motion to lay upon the table is made, and both motions will go over for future action.

PRINTING FOR COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk, and which I have been instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means to ask the House to adopt.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means be, and is hereby, authorized to have printed and bound such documents and papers for the use of said committee as it may deem necessary in connection with subjects considered or to be considered by the Committee on Ways and Means during the term of the Fifty-second Congress.

Mr. SPRINGER. A resolution of this character has been usual heretofore, and I ask immediate consideration of the question.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the resolution; which was adopted.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING LOCAL RIVER AND HARBOR BILLS.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, on the call of States for the introduction of bills there have been introduced numerous bills for the improvement of particular rivers and harbors; and under the rule which has been adopted 500 copies of each of these bills will have to be printed. Now, as gentlemen are aware, improvements of rivers and harbors when reported are included in one general bill, and the printing of so many copies of these bills for the improvement of particular rivers and harbors will be an entirely useless expense. I therefore ask unanimous consent that there be printed 50 copies instead of 500 copies of these various bills relating to rivers and harbors.

Mr. BLOUNT. Why should not this whole matter be left to the Committee on Printing? I think my friend from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] had better leave it there.

Mr. MCCREARY. I suggest that if any order of this kind is to be adopted, we should print at least 100 copies of each bill.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will accept the gentleman's suggestion, and modify my request in that way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana modifies his original request and now asks that of the bills providing for special river and harbor improvements there be printed 100 copies instead of 500, as already provided. Is there objection?

Mr. BUSHNELL. I object. I will say——

Mr. BLANCHARD. Heretofore they have not been printed at all.

Mr. BUSHNELL. It seems to me that they ought to be printed, at least enough of them to give us information as to what we are doing.

Mr. BLANCHARD. My proposition is to print 100 copies of each bill, instead of 500 copies which would be printed unless we take the action I ask. The object is simply to save useless expenditure. These separate bills are never reported back; these particular improvements are all included in one general bill.

Mr. BUSHNELL. If the question is simply as to printing the separate bills, I do not care particularly about that; and I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the proposition. The rule provides for the printing of 500 copies of every public bill introduced, which would include these various bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors. The gentleman from Louisiana, the chairman of the committee on that subject, states that in view of the fact that these various local improvements are never reported separately, but are all included in a general bill, the number to be printed of each bill should be reduced to 100.

Mr. OATES. The gentleman's proposition excepts from the rule no other bills than those relating to rivers and harbors?

Mr. BLANCHARD. That is all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Louisiana? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. DAVIS. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the gentleman's objection comes rather late; but still, as he was on his feet and may have been seeking the attention of the Chair, the objection will be entertained.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I submit that the objection came too late.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point is made that the objection came too late. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. DAVIS] whether, at the time the announcement from the Chair was made, he was on his feet seeking to obtain recognition from the Chair in order to object.

Mr. DAVIS. I rose for that purpose, Mr. Speaker, but was not heard. Two or three other gentlemen were recognized while I was on my feet seeking the attention of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's object was to object?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes, sir; I objected four or five times.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the gentleman's statement covers the case, and will recognize the objection. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. DAVIS] objects.

Some time subsequently

Mr. DAVIS said: On the explanation which I have received from gentlemen around me I will withdraw the objection.

Mr. ENGLISH. I renew it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey renews the objection.

Subsequently

Mr. ENGLISH said: As I understand that this relates only to the printing of the bills introduced for the improvement of rivers and harbors to-day, I will withdraw the objection.

There being no further objection, the request of Mr. BLANCHARD was then agreed to.

PRINTING FOR COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be authorized to have printed and bound all documents for the use of said committee that it may deem necessary in connection with subjects in relation to appropriations being considered, or to be considered, by the said committee during the Fifty-second Congress.

The resolution was adopted.

On motion of Mr. HOLMAN the motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PREPARATION OF APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am also directed to ask present consideration of the resolution I now send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations shall have power to send for persons and papers and administer oaths in pursuing inquiries touching any matters of legislation referred to it by the House, and shall have leave to sit during the sessions of the House, during the Fifty-second Congress.

Mr. HOLMAN. Permit me to say a word in regard to this resolution. The authority to sit during the sessions of the House has usually been granted to that committee, but the other proposition, authorizing the committee to send for persons and papers in regard to inquiries referred to it by the House, has not been uniformly adopted, but at successive sessions of Congress a similar provision has been adopted as a matter of convenience, and to avoid the necessity of directly appealing to the House for such authority in particular cases.

The resolution was adopted.

On motion of Mr. HOLMAN the motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ASSIGNMENT OF COMMITTEE CLERKS.

Mr. RUSK. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Accounts is hereby authorized and directed to designate the committees of the House to which clerks provided for by the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1892, should be allowed and assigned for the present Congress, and report by resolution to the House for its action thereon.

Mr. RUSK. The report accompanying the resolution recommends its passage.

I will state, for the information of the House, that the object of the resolution, which is passed at the beginning of each Congress, is simply to authorize the Committee on Accounts to make distribution of the clerical force provided for by the appropriation bill to the various committees in order that they may complete their organization and proceed to the work of the session. The necessity that this work should be done by the Committee on Accounts arises from the fact that while the salaries of a number of the clerks provided for by the general appropriation bill is specified, the great majority of the committee clerks are provided for in bulk, and it is necessary in selecting and assigning the clerks that the aggregates of the expenditure provided for salaries should not exceed the total appropriation. Hence it is important that this work should be done.

Further, I will state to the House it is no way bound by the report of the committee, as the resolution requires it to report back to the House for consideration.

The resolution was adopted.

On motion of Mr. RUSK, the motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.
